Lockout cuts off beer supply

British Columbia's three major breweries locked out members of the Brewery, Winery and Distillery Workers Union today, bringing beer production to a halt in the province and forcing the government to look south of the border for fresh supplies.

The breweries imposed the lockout at 2 a.m. making good their threat to shut down at midnight Friday unless the 1,400-member union accepted a final offer.

Talks between the union and Brewery Labor Relations Association representing Molson's, Labbatt's and Carling O'Keefe have been deadlocked since Monday.

The union is seeking a $1.05 an hour increase each year in a two-year agreement while the breweries have offered $1 an hour each year in a three-year contract. Bottling line workers now are paid $10.10 an hour.

The union refused to put the offer to its membership, although locals at Creston and Victoria voted Friday in apparent defiance of their executive. Results of the votes were expected to be released later today.

Union spokesman John Langley has said there was some dissension within the membership over the decision not to hold a vote on the offer, but said the breweries must first settle with Pacific Breweries Distributors' office workers who rejected a contract offer Wednesday.

Barry Granger, vice-president of the 110-member union local in Victoria, said today he was disappointed with the lockout action.

"We have been prepared to talk any time. We have a strike mandate but we didn't give notice we'd use it in hopes of settling the contract.

"But we don't seem to get too much good-faith bargaining with this association."

A union executive meeting was to be held today and a full membership meeting is scheduled for Monday at the Union Centre on Quadra Street.

Granger said the primary issue in the dispute is not so much wages as union security. The companies want more control over hiring halls, which the union has run for the past 20 years.

While beer parlor waiters face the prospect of layoffs as supplies evaporate, 6,000 12-bottle cases of U.S. beer were being shipped to Vancouver from Seattle.

A branch spokesman said procedures during the last strike — a three-month shutdown in the summer or 1978 — are being reviewed.

During that shutdown the branch imported 8.3 million dozen beer from the U.S. and Canada Customs relaxed its two-case declaration limit to 10.

Several liquor store spokesmen said they did not expect import stocks to last long, even at prices several dollars higher than domestic brands.

Canada Customs' acting operations manager John Bouzek said he expects long lineups at all border crossings this weekend as B.C. residents return from the United States with their allotted quantity of two gallons of U.S. beer.

The brewery union now is affiliated with the B.C. Government Employees Union, whose members staff government liquor stores. Bob Moore, a BCGEU spokesman, said members have agreed not to act against liquor stores unless imported beer hurts a strike.

3 boys drown in rescue tragedy

LANGLEY (CP) — Two young boys died Friday near here while trying to save a third who also drowned.

Police say four youngsters were playing in a gravel pit when eight-year-old Gurjit Pejatta of Clearwater fell from a one-metre bank into a 1.6-metre-deep pond.

His nine-year-old brother Sumin fell into the water while trying to rescue him and 10-year-old Butta Bassi of Richmond then fell into the pond while trying to help the brothers. All three were non-swimmers.

Another brother, 10-year-old Gagandeep Pejatta, jumped into the water, but was unable to help the three boys. He swam three metres across the small pond and summoned help from their parents who were working at a nearby field.

RCMP say Gurjit Pejatta was dead on arrival at hospital. Extensive efforts failed to revive the other two boys.

Youth on mend after jolt

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Kevin Berndt hopes his recent brush with death will remind others of the danger of power lines.

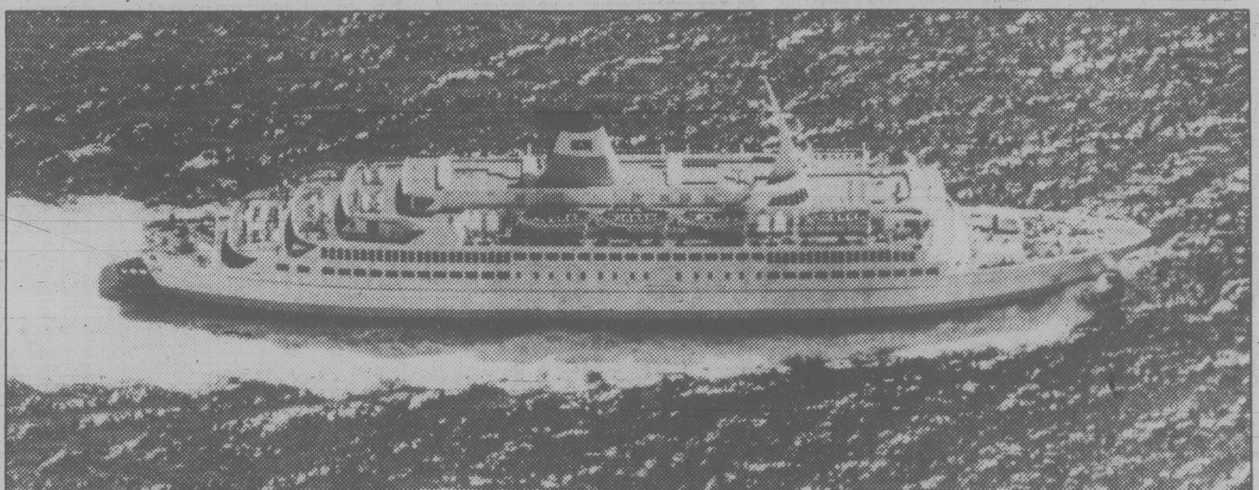
The 17-year-old Prince George youth is recovering in hospital from burns he received when he accidentally touched a 7,200-volt B.C. Hydro wire.

He and a friend had been using a transformer platform as a treehouse and Berndt was thrown seven metres to the ground after touching the wire with his head.

Cliff Day, hydro district manager, described Berndt as a very lucky boy and said the company had no idea the boys were using the platform as a treehouse.

"I don't remember too much," Berndt said from his hospital bed where he is recovering from first- and second-degree burns to his head, face, neck, shoulders and back.

"I guess I was knocked out. The first thing I remember is the ambulance attendants getting me up."



B.C.'s once-elegant cruise now plagued with problems

By PAUL MINVIELLE

B.C. Ferry Corporation's cruise up the scenic Inside Passage, a once-elegant travel package that enticed the world's wealthy, has deteriorated so much it's beginning to attract mainly what a crew member calls "the barefoot, packsack crowd."

The Times has been told the Queen of the North — originally the Queen of Surrey but renamed when she replaced the Queen of Prince Rupert on the Port Hardy-Prince Rupert route — has been plagued with serious problems.

They include:

— An inoperative fire detection system.
— Inadequate navigation radar.
— A hard-to-read compass card.
— Accommodation shortage.
— Unusable crew quarters.
— Misleading advertising.
— Passenger dissatisfaction.
— Faulty refrigeration equipment.
— Sloppy design in the refit.
— Fire extinguisher and hose containers not painted red.
— Collapsing aircraft-type seats.

"The original equipment aboard is fine," a crew member said, "but the refit has been botched terribly."

The Times attempted to contact B.C. Ferry's chief executive officer Charles Gallagher and corporate communications manager Bill Bouchard to comment on the ship's problems, but Gallagher didn't return the calls and Bouchard wasn't in.

A call to Transport Minister Alex Fraser's office resulted in a call back from Fraser's ministerial assistant Jess Ketchum.

Told about some of the problems, Ketchum said he hadn't heard of them.

Told about passengers sleeping on decks around the ship, Ketchum said, "That's strange."

On complaints about the service, Ketchum said the minister's office hasn't received any complaints.

The German-built ship was originally the Swedish liner Stena Danica. It's the same ship former B.C. Steamship's general manager Arthur Elworthy wanted but didn't get as a replacement for the Princess Marguerite on the Victoria-Seattle run.

One problem caused by the refit was that junction boxes in the fire detection system were covered over with steel channeling to which was attached panelling

The ship's entire fire warning system was inoperative the first two weeks the vessel was on the run.

This was the main reason the ship left Port Hardy on her maiden run with only a temporary certificate of seaworthiness from the marine surveyor (still called the steamship inspector by some) of the Canadian Coast Guard's ship safety branch.

When the vessel left on the 230-nautical-mile northern run May 30, it had a certificate good for only two weeks, according to Stephen Rybak, regional manager of public affairs for Transport Canada.

Also aboard the ship those first two weeks were seamen whose sole duty was to mount a 24-hour fire watch.

Because the system was a Norwegian design, a Norwegian engineer and his assistant spent the same period aboard the ship sorting out the problems.

A subsequent safety inspection prompted the marine surveyor to approve a certificate which expires Oct. 28, 1980.

The Times learned the Queen of the North has been given "bottom-of-the-line Sperry radar" when most other ships in the fleet boast top-of-the-line, gyro-stabilized Decca radar or equivalent equipment.

Considered particularly essential on the often fog-shrouded Inside Passage, the Sperry radar, a crew member said, tends to "smear" whenever the ship changes course.

And at any instant a captain or mate checks the radar screen he is unable to simultaneously determine the ship's course because there is no compass handy.

Anyone watching radar and wanting to know the ship's course must ask the helmsman.

But a difficult-to-read compass card has resulted in the helmsman occasionally calling out a wrong course heading.

Gambling prince stung in $20M theft

CANNES (AP) — A high-rolling Arab prince and one of his four wives claim to be more than $20 million poorer after a burglary at their guarded hilltop villa on the French Riviera. Police say the theft, possibly the largest in French history, may have been an inside job.

Prince Abdel Aziz bin Ahmed al Thani, a son of the former ruler of the oil-rich Persian Gulf emirate of Qatar, reported the loss of a collection of jewels he valued at $20 million. It was said to be one of four similar sets the prince had given to each of his wives.

In addition, the prince reported $120,000 in foreign currencies was taken "from on top of a bedside table" in the Thursday night theft, police said.

Investigators said if the prince's estimate of the loss is accurate it would make it the biggest robbery in French history.

A police spokesman said the prince — who is rumored to gamble up to $375,000 a day at Riviera casinos — provided a statement about the theft through his secretary.

The burglary from the second floor of the villa apparently occurred while the prince and his wife were dining on the first floor

The windows of their second-floor rooms were left open because of the heat and the burglar or burglars could have come through them. But police said they found no signs of outside entry, leading them to speculate it might have been an inside job. The villa has a staff of 20.

Investigators said Prince Abdel Aziz called jewellers to value the collections he had given his other wives. Police said the jewellers indicated each set was worth at least $20 million.

Another member of the Qatari royal family, Prince Mohamed Ben Hamad al Thani, a brother of the country's current ruler, had a suitcase containing $87,500 worth of jewels and cash stolen from his apartment in a leading Paris hotel recently, police said.

Battle lines drawn as oil talks fizzle

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The impasse reached by Prime Minister Trudeau and Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed over a new oil-pricing agreement Friday opens the door to a bitter constitutional battle over higher petroleum prices for the next several years.

Both leaders said Friday following the breakdown of two days of face-to-face negotiations they would assess the situation before deciding on any unilateral action.

"There is a fairly heavy list of serious consequences as a result of today," the Alberta premier told reporters, warning that the deadlock would sour the provinces to Trudeau's plan to write a new constitution.

Trudeau, on the other hand, did his best to defuse the atmosphere of crisis. "I didn't see the ceiling falling in on our heads."

"Negotiations failed," he conceded. "It has happened many times, in many fields without the country going to ruin. . . It does not mean gas and oil will stop flowing."

But that could happen. In just six days, the agreement under which Alberta supplies the rest of the country with oil at $14.75 a barrel expires. That leaves the province in a position either to set a price of its own or simply refuse to sell its oil.

Lougheed refused to say what the province would do. He deflected question after question on the explosive subject by insisting that he had to consult his caucus next Wednesday before deciding what action to take.

Lougheed warned of an "obvious confrontation" facing the country while Trudeau, acknowledging the two sides are far apart, told reporters "we're not starting any war."

The major sticking point for Alberta — aside from pricing — is a federal plan to impose a new tax on exports of natural gas. Lougheed views the proposal as "offensive" and a clear intrusion by Ottawa into an area of provincial jurisdiction.

The Liberal government counters that it must increase its share of petroleum revenues to pay for development of new energy sources and says there is nothing illegal about its plan to tax energy exports.

Commenting on the failure of the energy talks, Premier Bill Bennett said Ottawa's proposed export tax on natural gas is an attack against the West for failing to elect any Liberal MPs west of Winnipeg.

Bennett repeated his government's opposition to the tax, calling it an additional

Ferry cruise deteriorates

The combination of radar smearing and a difficult-to-read compass card has some officers worried.

There is a shortage of accommodation. There are 95 cabins with 220 berths aboard the Queen of the North, compared to 123 staterooms the Rupert used to have (some three dozen staterooms were ripped out to prepare the Rupert for the Victoria-Seattle run).

But when the Workers' Compensation Board declared five aft crew cabins on the Queen of the North unfit because of high noise levels and a sixth cabin was flooded by a backed-up sewage tank, six staterooms were assigned to the crew. This left only 89 staterooms and 188 berths for passengers.

On one occasion, a crew member said, three elderly Indian women picked up at Bella Bella around midnight had to sleep, respectively, in a telephone booth, atop a milk crate and on the deck propped up in a corner.

On the Rupert, those passengers without stateroom accommodation all stayed in one lounge area. On the Queen of the North, however, passengers without accommodation are all over the ship.

"It's difficult to walk around at night because of the sleeping bodies," a crew member said.

He said some passengers have even taken suitcases down from the luggage rack and sleep on the rack bars.

More than one-quarter of the Rupert's staterooms had porthole views, while only four cabins on the Queen of the North have them.

The advertising has led to upset passengers.

"It's advertised as a first-class ship," said a crew member. He said ads in the U.S. depicting dining service aboard the Queen of the North had shown white tablecloths and smiling waiters.

In fact, passengers are treated to white plastic countertops and a waiterless cafeteria.

Few crew members like the cafeteria's drab decor.

"It's all grays and browns. There's no color," one of them complained.

In the two dozen trips since the new ship began on the run, passengers have been "extremely hostile" when they realize the ship isn't living up to its advance billing.

"On the Rupert, we had the expensive clientele, people who were ready to drop $200 on a meal. Now we're carrying people who bring their own brown bags."

A claim that there have been a number of tour cancellations could not be confirmed.

Somewhere between $4,000 and $10,000 worth of meat was spoiled and discarded after a refrigeration unit malfunctioned.

The problem is deteriorating tubing and subsequent leaking of Freon, the inert gas used under pressure in refrigeration units.

Three large carboys, each holding about 25 kilos of the coolant, were used every week until the crew finally solved the problem six weeks after the ship came out of refit.

There are examples of sloppy design. An example is the drains for the sinks and dishwashers in the ship's galley on the ship's starboard side.

Draining dishwater ends up gushing down above the perforated metal ceiling on the car deck.

From there the water dribbles over vehicles parked beneath.

On the port side, water from the bar sink used to meet a similar fate, but it has since been repaired by the crew.

"But that isn't what the crew should be doing," a crew member said. "That's what the refit was all about.

In refit, the ship was apparently painted in rainy weather. Since then, the paint has started flaking badly and the ship looks as if it's been on the run without maintenance for two years.

And paint created a safety problem.

All the boxes containing the ship's dry chemical extinguishers and inside fire hoses were painted the same color as adjacent bulkheads, making them extremely difficult to find, especially in an emergency.

The crew had to find and paint the boxes red.

For those unfortunates who don't have staterooms for the overnight trip to Prince Rupert, there are always the ship's 230 aircraft-style reclining seats.

There's a bit of a problem there too, however. It seems about 100 of the seats been made useless at various times after the backs have collapsed.

The seats were salvaged from Trans-World Airlines.

Constitution battle set as oil talks break down grab on B.C.'s revenues. He estimated it would milk provincial coffers of $300 million this year. He projected that as export markets, volumes and prices increase, the figure could become astronomical, rising to "billions and billions of dollars."

The premier wouldn't say how he arrived at the figures.

Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney said Friday that he wished Trudeau had given Lougheed's proposals more consideration.

He said he was concerned with Ottawa's claim that it needs more money from oil produced in Canada in the form of an export tax. Blakeney said the federal government now collects about $23 on a barrel of oil exported from Saskatchewan.

Among the many areas of contention between Trudeau and Lougheed, the two sides also disagree on the rate of increase in domestic oil prices from the current low level of $14.75 a barrel. Alberta wants future rates determined according to those in the U.S., with Canada holding the line at about 75 per cent of the North American rate.

The Liberal government argues domestic prices should not be pegged to world levels and says U.S. prices will in effect reach international rates in a few years. Instead, Canadian prices should be based on production and replacement costs at home.

The Alberta premier proposed, and Trudeau rejected, that oil prices measured at Toronto be raised by $22.50 a barrel through Jan. 1, 1984, increasing rates then to $37.25. The Liberal government offered increases of $12.75 in the same period, taking the domestic rate to $27.50 a barrel. Further federal projections would increase per barrel prices to $35 by July 1, 1985.

Trudeau estimated the difference in revenue between the two offers at about $5 billion.

Trudeau immediately contacted several provincial premiers and urged them to re-examine the federal offer before taking a stand supporting Alberta.

Meanwhile Conservative economic development critic Harvie Andre, an Alberta MP, said the failure to strike a new deal leaves Ottawa and the western oil and gas producing provinces headed for a cold war.

Trudeau refused to rule out an early recall of Parliament to deal with the issue but declined to reveal the federal position until Alberta plots its next move.

At his press conference, Lougheed described the controversial gas export tax as a measure that could only reduce revenues even though the province owns the resource.

New troops 'pouring into Kabul'

NEW DELHI (AP) — The Soviet Union has begun pouring fresh troops and supplies into Afghanistan to replace units pulled from the defence of the Afghan capital and rushed south to fight mutinous Afghan soldiers and rebel tribesmen, reports reaching here today said.

The United News of India news agency quoted a British Broadcasting Corp. report from the Afghan capital as saying that there had been a "big build-up" of forces there.

And a traveller, who asked not to be identified, said the fresh Soviet troops apparently were replacing units dispatched the last few days to Ghazni and Kandahar provinces, south of Kabul.

In Ghazni, he said, the Soviet forces attacked an Afghan army garrison whose soldiers mutinied and sought to join up with the anti-Communist Afghan rebels.

"There has been heavy fighting in Ghazni," the source said. "At least 20 helicopter gunships, big ones . . . were seen attacking the garrison there."

The report could not be otherwise confirmed, but it coincided with a report Friday by another Kabul source of proven reliability that Soviet troops and armor had encircled the Ghazni garrison after its men balked at a change in command and threatened to desert.

13-year-old held in bridge burn-out

VANDERHOOF (CP) — A 13-year-old boy has been apprehended in connection with a fire Wednesday that damaged a wooden bridge across the Nechako River in this central B.C. community, police said Friday.

The blaze charred support beams and closed the span to vehicular traffic. The bridge links Highway 27 with Fort St. James and connects the north side of Vanderhoof with the south side.

Police said the fire was caused by a child playing with matches in a small room built underneath the main support of the bridge.

The matter was referred to probation services for a recommendation on whether charges will be laid under the Juvenile Act.

The highways ministry said it hoped to have the bridge open by today as crews were replacing several broken beams on the span Friday. The bridge was treated with creosote which burned rapidly once it caught fire.

While the span is under repair, the village of Fort St. James provided an ambulance, firetruck and RCMP vehicle for residents of Vanderhoof's north side.

A hospital clinic was set up in Vanderhoof's south side to complement regular hospital services on the north side.

Meanwhile, organizers of the annual Vanderhoof air show say the show event will go on as usual. They have spent $14,000 on performers and expect more than 10,000 spectators, triple the population of Vanderhoof.

Feds order Alcan to hike water flow

VANCOUVER (CP) — Aluminum Co. of Canada Ltd. has been ordered by federal Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc to increase water flow over its Kemano dam in northwestern B.C. by 10 times.

Alcan has been feuding with the federal department since November about water flow at the dam. Fisheries officials say a low water flow will destroy the Nechako River fish habitat and spawning grounds.

In November, the flow was 400 cubic feet a second but after repeated threats Alcan increased it to 850 cubic feet a second last month.

LeBlanc has rejected company claims that to further increase the flow would jeopardize river levels behind the dam — and therefore the dam's power output.

He has ordered an increase in the flow to 8,000 cubic feet a second until August 20 to protect fish now suffering from rising temperatures due to the diminished flow.

Wally Johnson, director of fisheries for B.C., said at a news conference that unless Alcan complies by July 30, a court injunction likely will be sought.

U.S. unions 'in jeopardy'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Unemployment, more sophisticated negotiating by management and lack of leadership are jeopardizing the future of unions in the United States, a panel of American labor relations experts heard Thursday.

"Unions are in a weakened position; there's no doubt about that," said Ken Moffett, deputy director of the U.S. Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

He told delegates to the annual conference of the Association of Labor Relation Agencies that high unemployment has depleted union ranks, which account for fewer than than 20 per cent of the U.S. work force.

And management has become more skilled using labor laws negotiating such issues as feather-bedding (more workers than necessary).

"More and more, management is holding forth and winning out on those issues," he said.

U.S. firms use the 1947 Taft-Hartley Act which permits a workers' decertification vote once the contract expires. A company fires a large number of employees when the contract expires, replacing them with management sympathizers for the vote, Moffett said.

Howard Jenkins, a member of the U.S. National Labor Relations Board, said American federal government unions lack the resources to mount full-scale negotiations with the U.S. government.

"Federal employees' unions' resources are smaller than a single Teamsters local."

Dr. Tony Sinicropi, president of the Society of Professionals in Dispute Resolution, said union leadership is failing to cope with the current industrial scene.

"The labor movement is intellectually bankrupt to deal with changes in society," he said. "Things will get worse for the union before they get better."

And he said increasing democracy among unions has led to unpredictable leadership.

Alert Bay: Ottawa set with cash

VANCOUVER (CP) — Federal funds are available to build a new hospital and detoxification centre in Alert Bay on Cormorant Island, off the northeast tip of Vancouver Island, Health Minister Monique Begin said Friday.

However, she said, the money only will be provided if the Nimpkish Indian band agrees to the project.

B.C. Health Minister Rafe Mair earlier said the provincial government is willing to enter into a cost-sharing formula with the federal government for the new facilities.

Mair said the proposed hospital will consist of 10 acute-care beds, two-extended care beds and three intermediate-care beds. He estimates the project will cost less than $1 million and hopes construction will be completed within a year.

The Nimpkish band, meanwhile, announced the appointment of a three-member health board.

"It's a first for a band in B.C. and could be a first in Canada," said band chief Roy Cranmer.

Board members Margaret Siroa, Helen Wille and Vivan Cook have been given the job of hiring a health co-ordinator as a first priority as well as reviewing existing health and social services in the village.

MLAs laud Fox's courage

The B.C. government has given unanimous approval to a motion recognizing and commending the bravery and courage of Terry Fox, the one-legged Port Coquitlam man running across Canada to raise money for cancer research.

The motion — first introduced by Emery Barnes (NDP — Vancouver Centre) April 12 — was passed Friday after Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe announced the government will donate $30,000 Monday to the Canadian Cancer Society on behalf of the 21-year-old student who lost his right leg to cancer.

Wolfe, who promised the money would be made available from Provincial Lottery funds, said Fox "exemplifies the very best we look for in citizens of this province."

Fox began his 8,000-kilometre run to Vancouver from St. John's, Nfld., April 12 and has reached southwestern Ontario. He is running about 40 kilometres a day and expects to be home by October.

Barnes, a former B.C. Lions football player, said he will meet Fox in Hope in the Fraser Valley and run the remaining 144 kilometres to Vancouver with him. He is looking for businesses to sponsor them both.

Barnes said the public has no idea the tremendous amount of courage it takes for Fox to subject himself to the strenuous run every day.

"A person who comes out of a death bed from a serious debilitating disease such as cancer and survives, knows what it's like to be close to death," Barnes said.

"I think it's that kind of inspiration that keeps him going because he feels that he has been giving a second opportunity to live at the young age of 21."

Barnes said Fox's run is one of the best things that has happened to Canadian unity.

"I believe in each province that he has passed through he has been able to leave behind a legacy of co-operation, something that will become part of the new Canadian heritage."

Student pot seller jailed

PENTICTON (CP) — A young man who organized a drug-trafficking enterprise involving three pounds (1.3 kilos) of marijuana stored in his high-school locker has been jailed for nine months.

Robert David Lang, who was 17 when he was charged with possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking last November, told police he was not a drug user himself, but had distributed the drug to make money.

Provincial court was told high-qaulity Colombian marijuana Lang purchased in Vancouver for $2,625 was stored in his locker at Penticton secondary school.

A total of eight ounces (232 grams) in 99 individual packages was found in Lang's possession when he was arrested by Penticton undercover RCMP.

Investigate the investigators

In police departments across Canada in recent years, the question has been asked: who investigates the investigators?

In other words, what sort of body should be set up to examine complaints from citizens who accuse policemen of harassment, brutality, or unjustified use of force? Should policemen, the trained investigators of our society, be allowed to rule on complaints against one of their own? Or should independent bodies of citizens be set up to do the job, even though investigating is not their area of expertise?

In B.C., the Police Commission has tried to solve the problem with a rather lengthy and complicated series of procedures that begins with complaints to the police department involved but can go on to the commission itself. Opponents of the system have argued that its very length and complexity may discourage citizens from bringing legitimate complaints forward.

Other provinces and cities have adopted different solutions, but questions about the systems have continued in Alberta, Toronto, Montreal and other places.

Canadian politicians and police officials might learn some lessons from a recent British report by the British Police Complaints Board. It is an essentially independent body set up three years ago to investigate complaints against the police that are not considered serious enough for criminal charges to be considered.

Having worked in the field for three years, the board's conclusion was that it is not the best body to do the job. It found itself overloaded with complaints it described as trivial: it investigated 6,416 cases of alleged police assault during the three-year period, but found fewer than 10 per cent that warranted further action.

The board was concerned about the extreme defensive attitude on the part of the police. This, it suggests, might have resulted in many more complaints than necessary coming to the board because citizens could not get satisfaction when they tried to resolve disputes informally. The police were basically unwilling to cooperate with a fully independent investigation body.

The report proposed a solution. It suggested that a special unit of police officers be set up to investigate complaints against the police, but that they be under the direction of a civilian, preferably a lawyer with judicial experience.

"We believe that this protection should be sufficient to allay doubts in the public mind as to the merits of the present system," the board wrote. "We also believe that a scheme of this kind would help protect the police from accusations of inadequate investigations and of being judge and jury in their own cause."

The proposal makes sense.

Although no individual police force in B.C. would be large enough to warrant the establishment of a special unit, a small province-wide squad could perhaps be set up, composed of members seconded from various police departments. If too few complaints are received to warrant the squad working full-time on this sort of issue, they could perform other duties as well. Care could be taken to ensure that no member of the unit was ever investigating a complaint about his own department.

The idea is worth investigation by the police commission.

More excuses to stay home

OTTAWA — If you are among the 97 per cent of Canadians who has a television in your residence, you should know that your federal government has changed its mind about you.

At least, some of the people at the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, the agency which tries to regulate what you watch on your television, have changed their minds about you.

Since 1972 it has been their stated conviction than you aren't desperate for access to Pay-TV — that most of you, at least, don't have a craving for someone to come in and wire your TV set so you can pay to see shows you aren't seeing now.

Old survey

In 1977 the CRTC did a survey of 2,289 of you, and came to the conclusion "that pay-TV was not considered essential and that there was no compelling demand for it, even among cable subscribers."

But pressures from cable companies — which stand to make silos full of money from Pay-TV — increased. Pay-TV was introduced in the United States and proved to be popular.

Those standing to benefit from the introduction of Pay-TV in Canada were able to prod a CRTC committee studying "the extension of (broadcasting) service to northern and remote communities" to consider the issue of Pay-TV as well.

The committee issued its report Thursday, announcing that a majority of its members now feel "that Pay-TV, in addition to broadening the choice of programming for viewers, might be of very substantial benefit to the broadcasting system, to program producers, to the Canadian entertainment industry, and to the Canadian electronics-manufacturing industry."

The CRTC, it concluded, should eventually hold hearings with the intention of issuing licences to introduce Pay-TV.

At the heart of the CRTC flip-flop, of course, is recognition of the basic truth that, as mediocre as most TV programming has been over the past 30 years, we want more.

It can be argued that we don't want more so much as we want better, but given that the networks already provide scores of movie reruns every week, and given that the quality of what Hollywood is offering is actually declining, the guess here is that we simply want more excuses to stay at home.

Probably the most notable quote from the committee's report notes that television is becoming increasingly dependent upon films in order "to help satisfy the voracious public appetite all over the world for seemingly endless entertainment in the home."

Whether this is a good thing or a bad thing is for sociologists and viewers themselves to decide, but the trend is obvious.

We feel safer, and more comfortable, in our own homes. Being entertained requires a lesser expenditure of energy, and probably, of money.

Our friends have become conversationalists like Johnny Carson, our lovers sexy young things like Cheryl Ladd, our advisers earnest sorts like Walter Cronkite.

It's interesting that the cable companies say they will want to charge Pay-TV users on a per-month rather than a per-show basis. They say it's because the technology is more difficult to charge per show, but Bell Canada has come up with a handy memory-bank attachment that would make charging per show just as easy.

More likely it's because a lulled audience is less trouble than an audience with a sliver of its critical faculties intact.

By the month?

Our antagonism toward our cable company would at least likely register on an encephalograph if we had just paid $3 to see a bum program, but how angry can we get if we're paying by the month and given that, if we want lots and lots of shows finally there's bound to be one that's worth it?

Also, there are the kids to think of as well. Pay-TV would mean they'd hang around the house more, and not be out there smoking dope with those varmints the neighbors brought up.

There are, of course, good arguments for more access to TV programming, the best being that the well-rounded human being is best served by being presented with all the options available.

'Squirrel' digs on pipeline

VANCOUVER — Up around Jean Marie River and Fort Simpson and Wrigley in the Northwest Territories five years ago, one of the dominant figures was Abe Okpik.

Abe is a droll Eskimo who sports a crew cut, a vast belly the size of Lake Athabasca, and a gimpy leg.

Every night during Mr. Justice Thomas Berger's Royal Commission on the Mackenzie Valley Pipeline, the remarkable CBC Radio Service under Whit Fraser sent out reports across the North in the Dogrib tongue, in Chipewayan, in Haireskin and Slavey, in the Loucheux dialect.

Then big Abe would do his broadcast in Eskimo.

Aid dubbed

He was a dominant, unintimidated personality, and when he noted a darting, energetic little lawyer on Judge Berger's staff, Ootpik solemnly announced he was going to confer an Eskimo name on the bustling aide.

The name was 'SikSik' and the proud young lawyer, when he asked what it meant, was told, "Squirrel."

The young lawyer's name was Ian Waddell and he never escaped the "Squirrel" nickname during all the history-making tenure of that commission.

Today Ian Waddell, with his inquisitive energy, is the legislator who made Parliament and the country sit up over the Liberal government's sleight-of-hand on natural gas exports.

He is now taking the government to court on the issue and we will be hearing a lot more about the bearded 37-year-old bachelor who laughs a lot and cares a lot.

Waddell was born in Scotland and came here as a child. His mother was a cleaning lady at the University of B.C. where he took his law degree. He studied international law at the London School of Economics.

He was head of the first Storefront Lawyer Program in Canada, set up in Vancouver. He served as an assistant city prosecutor, taught the first group of native court workers in the province and was a member of the B.C. Alcohol and Drug Commission.

For three years he was counsel to the Berger Commission, organized the public hearings and administered the Commission.

As the NDP member for Vancouver-Kingsway, he had to defeat the redoubtable Simma Holt in 1979 and then retain his seat this year. As his party's energy critic he has had to handle the duties mastered so well by Tommy Douglas.

Ian Waddell, through his Berger experiences, knows well the technical end of pipelines. He also knows the politics of pipelines.

The airy Liberal resolve to change in cabinet something that was passed in Parliament outrages him. It has also made him a small hero.

The Commons passed legislation to okay a pipeline that would transport Alaskan gas down through Canada to the lower 48 states. What the Liberals did, by order-in-council and a sweep of the pen, was to create a Canadian pipeline that would export Canadian gas.

There's the suspicion that the Americans will never complete their end of the $23-billion pipeline and Canada never will be able to cut off those exports. That's not what Parliament intended at all in the original legislation.

It is remarkable to watch the fluff and noise concocted because the neophyte MP and the NDP 'delayed' the 3-month summer holidays of the Commons.

The MPs haven't been exactly overworked. They sat only 66 days, and the new Liberal government, while Finance Minister Allan MacEachen dozes along in his casual way and Mr. Trudeau goes out and wins the Quebec referendum, hasn't given the MPs much to do.

Into a tizzy

The horror that they were delayed all of three days on a matter of principle seems to have thrown half of Ottawa, that knee-jerk town, into a tizzy.

Waddell wonders aloud why he, an innocent new boy, is the one who has to stand up for the rights of Parliament — as opposed to the whim of the Liberal cabinet.

He managed, through his imagination and stubborness, to alert the attention of the country to the arrogance of a government that, for all its years in power, still does not have an energy policy other than expediency.

The squirrel is alive and digging.

An amazing silence

In this space last week was an article saying the B.C. government was considering the "western separation option" as a solution to its problems with the federal government. The article quoted unnamed cabinet ministers outlining a scenario of increasing conflict with Ottawa that would end in a referendum on provincial rights which would be "a de facto referendum on sovereignty-association."

It seemed at the time downright amazing that cabinet ministers would make such statements, knowing they were to be printed for public consumption.

What happened this week was, however, no less amazing.

This week no one in the B.C. government denied those statements.

The expectation was that at the very least pro forma denials would have been issued, at the very least the government would have felt it necessary to say publicly that it was committed to national unity and to keeping the country together. The expectation was that the premier, or the intergovernmental relations minister, or the attorney-general or some other senior cabinet minister would have said in the House, or written a letter to the editor, or even spoken privately to the newspaper to say that the statements made were out of context, or were the view of only a few "hawks" in cabinet, or were made only in anger and frustration, or even just were not government policy.

None of those things happened.

Instead, Science Minister Pat McGeer said publicly that if any province had good grounds for wanting to separate, it was B.C.

Transport Minister Alex Fraser attacked Ottawa over changes to its subsidy policy for shipbuilding.

Premier Bill Bennett said the government was going to run a public information campaign this summer to let British Columbians become well acquainted with the province's stand on constitutional reform.

And in private too, the conversations continued.

The information campaign was spoken about at length. The implication of a number of cabinet ministers was that B.C. had not yet begun to fight in its federal-provincial battles.

If the premier's public description of the information campaign was that it would put forward B.C. constitutional position, private descriptions from ministers labelled it a campaign on "the costs to B.C. of Confederation." Subjects considered for inclusion would range back to the days of Sir John A. Macdonald through the Rowell-Sirois Royal Commission of the 1930s up to present-day grievances about tariffs, quotas, and equalization payments.

Ministers said the government had seen enough speeches from federal cabinet ministers about "parochial" and "greedy" provincial stands to become convinced they were being subjected to an organized public relations campaign from Ottawa. The point of the campaign, they believe, is to convince the people of the western provinces that their governments are being unreasonable in their demands. The only way to counteract such a campaign is to launch a better one of their own.

Other ministers continued to discuss referendum possibilities, and what sort of a question would be sure to pass in B.C. One minister went so far as to say he was nervous about starting off on a referendum trail for fear of the huge amount of separatist feeling it might unleash in the province.

Ministers noted that the calls on Vancouver open-line radio shows (John Reynolds and Gary Bannerman) were running about six to one in favor of the provincial position.

Equally interesting, word started to drift back over the Rockies about the Ottawa attitude to these carryings-on. The word was that Ottawa is just as militant as B.C. in its stand.

The federal ministers have, it is believed, concluded that B.C. is not interested in compromise or moderation, so a strongly federalist position might as well be put forward. The suggestion was made that Ottawa might put forward some "radical proposals" during the next few weeks — radical because they are so widely removed from anything that might be acceptable to the western provinces.

In Ottawa they are describing plans for the next month as "The Guns of August."

In B.C. they are describing it as "marching towards High Noon."

It would be a better script for a movie than for the future of our country.

Of seals and reality

CASCO BAY, Maine — At first it is impossible to find them. The seals pile onto the ledges at low tide as if they were part of the rocks. You have to know that they are there, always there, before you can separate them into categories: animal and mineral.

Today, they are lying in a heap of 20 to 30, belly up to the sun, portraits of contentment. From time to time, in the heat that has warmed even this Maine bay, one flips over like a baby, and slips casually into the ocean. Another bellies up the rocks again and settles into a new place.

It is enormously peaceful at our seal-watching post. The cormorants that took off from the water, flapping madly as we came near their home, return. The seals, accustomed to the lobstermen who work their territory, are equally tolerant of us. We, in turn, respect their own sense of distance.

From time to time, their curiosity competes with their wariness and they surround the boat, watching us watching them.

It has been months now since I last seal-watched here. Yet, they are doing precisely what they did last year, and what they will do next year.

Today I find that reassuring. I have come here directly from Detroit, from one world and sense of reality to another. From one culture to another. From the urgency and frenzy of important people doing important things to the timelessness of the bay.

In the week that passed, people made "news." Things changed. A new group came to power. A man was nominated to be president. Another nominated to be vice-president.

At the same time, every day on these ledges, the seals turned their bellies to the sun at low tide, and slid into the water.

Which was real, realer, realest?

Sitting in the boat, drifting too near the ledges, I wonder again whether this place is an escape from reality or an escape into it. Which is the constant? The things that change or those that do not? It is always easier to have a long perspective on other peoples, other species, other times. In the past year I am sure that much has happened to my small colony of seals: births, deaths, migrations, seasons.

Yet I am much more impressed by their sameness — the same heaps, the same curiosity, the same life-cycle. It reminds me of our own, human sameness. That seems to me, realer, surely realer than the drama of the "powerful" and the power of change.

In Detroit, in our public life and public places, we see and hear people who are more impressed by altering the world than by finding a way to live within it. The powerful are, almost by definition, change agents. They assume that we can — should — take hold of events and move them. They are the directors, the shapers.

Even the politicians who last week talked of "the eternal verities" and "fundamentals" and "everlasting", do not think of themselves as passengers in a larger life but as conductors. It comes with the territory of politics.

The others, people who believe that change is a kind of human vanity, are rarely seen on platforms. Those who believe that the current is more powerful and important than our efforts to fight it, or turn it, do not run for office.

I suppose they stop striving, and choose to do no harm. They watch the seals and go with the flow. They turn to simplicity or irony or poetry, not politics. They drop out, or drop back, and leave the world to the makers, the shapers.

Most of us get caught in our own dailiness, importance and change. We do what people have always done: maintain the sense, — the illusion? — that we control our lives.

But in this Maine bay, as we find ourselves beached, unceremoniously on the ledges, a colony of seals is my reminder of the other reality. I watch the seals watching us as we struggle to push off the rocks. We are too impatient to wait for the tide.

A victim of some sleazy international deals

Whale hypocrisy

THE VANCOUVER SUN
An Editorial

Canada has shown that it has no stomach for a ban on commercial whaling, either now or two years hence, having cast its lot with Chile, Iceland, Japan, South Korea, Peru, South Africa, Spain, and the Soviet Union. It joined these bedfellows, according to Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc, because "a modest harvest" is advisable, even though Canada apparently won't catch any whales.

Yet Canada's vote at this week's meeting of the International Whaling commission in England put it at odds with evidence indicating that, without a ban, the whale may become extinct within 10 years, and at odds with countries like Britain, the United States, Australia, Argentina, Denmark, France, New Zealand, The Netherlands, Mexico, Oman, the Seychelles, Sweden and Switzerland.

The countries in favor of a moratorium in fact outnumbered those, like Canada, against, but because the vote of 13 to nine fell short of 75 per cent, the ban was rejected.

Canada's attitude to whaling has been a mystery for years, but never so mysterious as it has been since 1972 when it embraced the whale as a symbol of the plight of our planet — this at the United Nations conference on the Human Environment in Stockholm — and joined in a unanimous call for an immediate 10-year moratorium on all commercial whaling.

Since then this country has either abstained or expressed no support at all for repeated efforts by the IWC to get a moratorium.

This week's about-face not only confirmed the worst fears of conservationists about the government's seeming lack of interest in the depletion of one whale stock after another, it elevated Canada into a league of whaling nations who see the whale not as an endangered species but as an economic resource and who, individually, if not collectively, are not above using economic muscle to protect and improve their position.

There have been reports that Japan, for example, made assistance in expanding Chile's lobster fishery contingent on Chile's voting with Japan at this week's meeting of the IWC.

Two years ago when Panama placed a moratorium proposal on the commission's agenda, the Japanese are reported to have threatened to cancel purchase of $9.5 million worth of sugar from a mill owned by the Panamanian govenment. Whether the threat was made or not, it is a matter of record that Panama withdrew its proposal, just as Chile, this time round, found it desirable to side with the Japanese.

This is the league in which Canada finds itself, and because of it the government will find it more difficult than ever to answer those who may wonder what kind of economic deals or understandings were made to gain membership.

The Japanese are good customers, after all, and there's a multi-billion-dollar coal deal just waiting for a price to be negotiated.

That's a cynical way of looking at it, and possibly even the wrong way, but it remains a fact that Japan, along with the Soviet Union, took the lead at this week's IWC meeting in vowing to oppose the "tyranny" of nations seeking to save whales from extinction through a global ban on hunting the mammals.

Perhaps it was too much to expect Canada, with its seal-hunting record, to show concern for the whale. But in abandoning all pretence of caring, it has shown a degree of contempt for the truth, as expressed at Stockholm, that we never thought possible.

Carter's brother hostage profiteer

By WILLIAM SAFIRE
New York Times

Why do you suppose Zbigniew Brzezinski lied when he insisted to me last Sunday that he had not discussed Libya with Billy Carter? Why did he claim that the only reason the president's brother came to him after a Justice Department interrogation was because Zbig was "a family friend"?

And why did presidential counsel Lloyd Cutler tell reporters that Billy Carter just "showed up" at his office, assuring us that "nothing sinister" could be attached to the person who arranged for him to just "show up"?

No matter of national security caused these deliberate deceptions. The sole reason for this week's dissembling in the White House was to cover up Jimmy Carter's dirtiest little secret: that he had entrusted a diplomatic mission to his besotted, bigoted brother — and that Billy Carter immediately took advantage of his official hostage-crisis credentials to set up a multimillion-dollar oil deal.

Follow the hostage profiteering:

On Nov. 27, 1979, Brzezinski met at 11:30 a.m. with the president, vice-president, CIA Director Turner and Hamilton Jordan. The White House admits the national security adviser then went to a meeting about the Iranian crisis and other matters that Billy Carter had been asked to arrange with Ali el-Houdari, dictator Khadafy's representative in the U.S.

On Dec. 10, two weeks after the Brzezinski-Billy Carter-Houdari meeting, Khadafy told Youssef Ibrahim of The New York Times in Libya that he had received "assurances" from the U.S.: "We have received these assurances in the last few days through unofficial but reliable channels from President Carter," said Khadafy. "We interpret them as meaning a more neutral American posture in the conflict between the Arabs and Israel."

In the midst of this dealing with an Arab leader who considers Yasir Arafat too moderate, Billy Carter — who had not until then been able to shake substantial money out of the Libyans — presented his bill: a 55-cents-a-barrel commission on Libyan-American oil sales that could earn him $20 million, and a half-million-dollar loan.

The "loan" was probably an advance on commissions to help him pay arrears to the Internal Revenue Service. In the lax Atlanta office of IRS, agents had turned stringent after criticism of an earlier "sweetheart audit" of Carter Warehouses.

Within one month — in January of this year — Houdari, the same Libyan friend of Billy who relayed the Brzezinski "assurances" to Khadafy, signed the first cheque after seeing results from Billy Carter's obviously valuable services. More important, the president's brother was encouraged to become the middleman in oil sales, an idea first advanced by Robert Vesco.

The Carter-Houdari deal was probably this: Billy was to deliver Brzezinski's assurances of a second-term tilt toward the Arabs, along with a pipeline into the Oval Office — in return for Khadafy's message to Ayatollah Khomeini on the hostages to show President Carter what an effective diplomat his little brother could be, along with the whopping oil commissions and a small advance to tide him over.

Two months later, in March, electronic intercepts alert Brzezinski to the likelihood that First Brother would soon be cashing in on the hostage initiative with his oil deal. He takes this to Jimmy Carter, who tells his national security adviser to call Billy Carter to warn him (a possible violation of the Communications Intelligence Act). At that point, the president must have realized he had created a double agent: While his brother was ostensibly helping with the hostages, he was able to use this activity to get commissions directed his way by a foreign power.

BILLY . . . 'money-grubbing'

When Brzezinski was finally forced into the open this week, counsel Cutler shrewdly tried to focus the question of the president's guilty knowledge on the payments of $220,000, part of the advance against future oil commissions. That detail is insignificant compared to the president's knowledge of his brother's multi-million-dollar oil deal.

The president and his closest advisers — fully aware that the Department of Justice was lazily trying to get Billy Carter to register — did nothing then to cause him to make full disclosure or to disclose the whole sordid story themselves.

At Philip Heymann's criminal division, where every week is Brotherhood Week, nobody involved in this scandal has been put under oath. A Senate select committee, with special counsel, would put an end to the see-no-evil favoritism.

Diplomatic urgency rather than national security is now being peddled by the White House as justification for this year's cover-up. Nobody's buying; we all knew that Jimmy Carter profited in the polls from the seizure of Americans as hostages, but few suspected that his money-grubbing brother would try to make a bundle out of a tragedy.

Family radio

I write regarding your article of July 10, "CRTC says blunt no to religious radio station," one which would be based in Vancouver.

On February 13, 1979, Canadian Family Radio received approval in principle from the CRTC. On May 1, 1979, Dr. Camu, chairman of the commission, told Mr. Jacobson, the station sponsor, that he did in fact have his licence and could proceed. He and his company leased facilities, engaged staff, and began preparations.

In May, 1979, a religious group based in Ontario began opposition to the Western Canada-based company. Out of this grew the denial of the application for Canadian Family Radio Ltd. to broadcast. This is another of many indications that Eastern Canada does not know or care what our preferences are in Western Canada. Have they a right to say what we must listen to on radio?

The Ottawa govenment and Mr. Trudeau, he being minister of justice and later prime minister, have passed laws that downgrade family life in Canada.

1. Divorce made easy: Broken homes mulitply; children are thrust aside, hurt, hostile and embittered.

2. Sexual perversion legalized. Sodomy blights the minds and bodies of many of our youth. It is a menace that preys upon children.

3. Abortion on demand. Scores of thousands of precious babies here in B.C. will perish by the request of their own mother.

Canadian Family Radio would have countered this trend with Godly counsel and instruction. The CRTC says our interests are "narrow and sectarian". Do they have the right to deny us programs based on Scriptures stablilizing to Western Canadian family life? Must we go the broad road to destruction with CRTC?

The CRTC objects to 37½ hours of Christian music a week. Compare this to the hundreds of hours of demoralizing rock blaring from the other radio stations weekly. A sizable percentage of British Columbia residents prefer music that is harmonious, soothing and uplifting. Does the CRTC have the right to deny us this?

I object to having Eastern Canada dictate to us in this matter, and in this manner. — K. Meiklejohn, 609 Donovan Avenue.

Re: July 18 TV Telethon "Holocaust: Part Two".

This letter is a reaction to the recent broadcast of the ICA telethon on CKVU. While I agree with the objectives of this event, namely to feed, clothe and shelter refugees from countries involved in political upheavals, I emphatically disagree with their approach. They resorted to unabashed sentimentality and made repeated derogatory references to "atheistic Communism", the "brutal Soviet military power" and other catch phrases intended to stir up our emotions and open our pocketbooks. Patriotism was certainly not lacking. The moderator informed his audience that they lived "in the greatest country in the world". This was an American telethon, yet a Canadian could just as easily have uttered such a ridiculously patriotic claim. North Americans on the whole tend towards ethnocentricity.

It is time we opened our eyes and our ears, and admitted that any political system, no matter what its orientation, will have faults. Are all men not brothers? The "Christian" biases which were thrown in our faces were highly offensive, being an accumulation of the many recent media attempts to stir up a fresh batch of McCarthy soup. I find this soup repellent and unpalatable.

I was not deceived by this ICA organization's panderings to the hearts of the "free world". I would advocate supporting essentially non-political societies such as Save the Children Fund, Ox-Fam and Unitarian Service Committee. But by supporting the ICA I would in effect be condoning their obviously intolerant political stance. North America's ignorance of the rest of the world is immense already. Let us not have our local television stations promoting this socioeconocomic ignorance any longer. — Michael T. Ross, 1 2321 Cook Street.

Speed in Sooke

I am puzzled as to what criteria are used in determining speed limits, and wonder how many others in East Sooke and similar outlying districts share my bewilderment.

In the very heart of the city, on Douglas Street and Government Street, where the traffic is thick, and where busy intersections occur at 100 yard intervals, the speed limit is 50 kph. It would seem reasonable that as traffic thins out toward the remoter outskirts, some recognition of a difference would be made by increasing the speed limit. But such is not the case. Right through Colwood, along Metchosin Road, Happy Valley Road, Rocky Point Road, and East Sooke Road till it eventually reaches the sea, the limit remains an unbending 50 kph. That houses, cars and people give place to trees and cows makes no difference at all. That the road may be straight and clear for a full half-mile has no bearing on the matter either: 50 kph is the mysteriously appropriate limit all the way.

Precisely why? Is it that the authorities cannot be troubled to assess the risks realistically in different areas? Or is it that an artificially low limit produces more infractions, and these, in turn, a crop of higher premiums for the benefit of ICBC? — S. G. Field, East Sooke Road, R.R. 1, Sooke.

OUTSIDE
WALL COATING REQUIRES NO PAINTING

Another benefit of modern technology is available to the home owner. An exterior wall coating so tough and durable that it is guaranteed to reduce the need for exterior house painting for 15 years. This remarkable development is Kenitex Textured Coatings.

Developed during the last war, and manufactured in 34 countries, there are now over six million Kenitex applications on homes, commercial, and industrial buildings throughout the world. In the U.K. thousands of applications remain in perfect condition after more than 19 years exposure in all weather extremes.

Kenitex weatherproofs and decorates. It is applied in one quick spray application without inconvenience, up to 20 times thicker than ordinary paint. Kenitex seals holes, cracks and hides building defects yet does not conceal the original architectural lines.

Kenitex carries a factory 15 year material replacement warranty against chipping, flaking and peeling. It is extremely flexible and withstands all normal building expansion and contraction.

Actually shot from a gun, Kenitex fuses to the building walls. It is available in a variety of beautiful modern colours. Kenitex performance is backed by Agreement Certificate 75/300. THAT its Victoria office, located at 1008 Blanshard Street, is in the process of being reorganized in order to achieve a more streamlined operation. Office size is being reduced as is the size of the staff. For those who wish to make donations or obtain information, the office hours will remain as they are, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"THE WESSEX"
GRACIOUS LIVING IN OAK BAY

If you have been dreaming of building an elegant home in a beautiful natural environment that retains the convenience of nearby schools and shopping areas, look no further than "The Wessex" in Oak Bay.

Nestled in the wooded surroundings of the Henderson-Lansdowne area, twenty-seven spacious single-family lots will be sold by public auction on a one-per-person basis before the end of this summer.

The rapidly diminishing supply of land ensures that this development will be one of the last of its kind to be undertaken in the Oak Bay area.

The upset prices will include full servicing: sanitary and storm sewers, watermains, underground wiring, sidewalk installation, landscaping and fencing along Foul Bay Road, and ornamental street lighting.

The 6,094 yard Uplands Golf Club is within easy walking distance, and the University of Victoria campus is less than a mile away.

The Municipality of Oak Bay will be pleased to provide interested persons with copies of the subdivision plan, terms and conditions of sale, and any additional information that they may require.

Bennett was named the top radio documentary of the year in British Columbia by the Radio and Television News Directors Association. The same documentary was the Honourable Mention winner in the RTNDA's national competition.

Terry Spence is Vice-President of C-FAX News and Information programming. As well as being featured newscaster on the major C-FAX morning news, Terry now co-hosts the daily "Talk It Over" program with Bev Sinclair from 10.00 a.m. to noon.

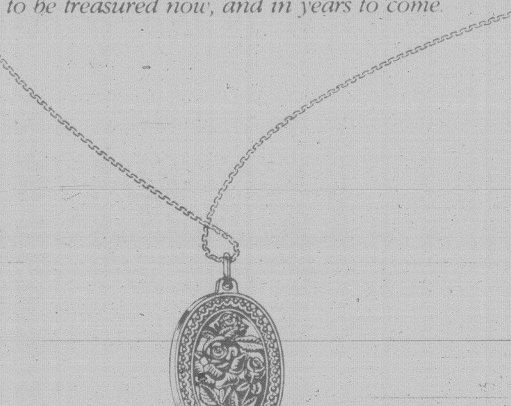
In tribute to a most glorious and beloved lady — for a very special day

THE QUEEN MOTHER'S BIRTHDAY PENDANT

A timely gift of beauty — to be treasured now, and in years to come.



Solid sterling silver with matching sterling silver chain.
Available only until midnight August 10, 1980.

Few people in our lifetime have been so universally loved and admired as Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth The Queen Mother. She is, in a very real sense, a mother to an entire nation. And thus her 80th birthday is much more than a personal occasion — it is a special event.

Special events — particularly royal ones — have traditionally been marked by the issue of special commemoratives. The firm of John Pinches Limited has a history of creating such commemoratives which can be traced back through six reigns. And now, to celebrate this royal birthday, it has created a unique pendant in solid sterling silver.

In designing this pendant, the aim was to create a work which would rival, in its beauty and craftsmanship, those issued by our forebears . . . and which in time to come will be treasured in exactly the same way.

To achieve this goal, most exacting criteria were set. For such a piece of jewelry must not merely be decorative. It must possess, as well, a beauty that is timely and universal. A beauty such that, when 100 years from now our great-grandchildren look upon it, this commemorative will be as meaningful in their eyes as it is today.

The result, The Queen Mother's Birthday Pendant, is a cameo pendant of classic oval design, fashioned in sterling silver, and adorned with the celebrated Elizabeth of Glamis rose — named in honour of the Queen Mother.

The Queen Mother's Birthday Pendant is issued in a strictly limited edition in Canada, Britain and Commonwealth countries to mark Her Majesty's 80th birthday. The pendant may be purchased in Canada only through The Franklin Mint Canada Ltd. and only until August 10, 1980. The total number of pendants will precisely equal the number of orders received postmarked by midnight, August 10th.

LET'S TALK REAL ESTATE

GOT MONEY TO INVEST?

Consider investing in your own mortgage. Many mortgages have a clause which allows you to make payments of principal on anniversary dates of the mortgage. Say you have a $50,000 mortgage at 12%, with payments of $515.95 monthly, to be made over a period of 25 years. If you were to take advantage of a payment of principal clause and were to pay off 10% of the principal at the end of each year of the mortgage, you would reduce your total cost of the mortgage by over $78,000 and your mortgage would be paid in full in seven years instead of 25. Annual payments of less than 10% of the principal amount will still reflect dramatic reductions in the total cost of your mortgage. It is worth looking into.

Sidney mayor slams hospital commission

Arrogance and insensitivity to community needs by the regional hospital commission is alleged by regional health board member Norma Sealey.

Speaking on a television panel, the Sidney mayor said the commission had become irresponsible in refusing to listen to elected officials, such as the regional hospital board.

The commission has insisted that all obstetric and pediatric cases be handled on a regional basis at a single unit providing a high level of care, such as the Helmcken Road regional hospital now under construction. It believes decentralized care is wrong.

Meanwhile, the board moved Wednesday to take away the commission's power to make decisions, a step requiring approval of the provincial government. Members of the commission come from municipal councils, the medical profession, hospital boards and the public at large.

Sealey represents an area which relies chiefly on a community facility, Saanich Peninsula Hospital.

Dr. Hal Worrall, the hospital's chief of staff, appeared with Sealey on the panel and predicted that when Helmcken is open and providing regional obstetric services, the peninsula hospital will not be paid for maternity cases it handles.

That will force it to send patients to Helmcken and discourage physicians from taking maternity cases because of the travelling distance.

Saanich to divert cash from road to drainage?

Money earmarked by Saanich for North Dairy-Finlayson extension this year may be diverted to drainage work, owing to flooding in the same neighborhood and lack of co-operation by the city of Victoria and commercial operators.

Since the street forms the boundary between Saanich and Victoria, and Hillside shopping mall adjoins the city side of the line, financing of the street was to be shared. Saanich would have paid most of the $500,000, Victoria less than one fifth of that.

In view of the city and commercial property owners' apparent refusal to take part in the project, Saanich engineer Cliff Warren is recommending Saanich devote attention instead to a large culvert needing replacement at the west end of the proposed connection, and on Feltham west of Tyndall in Gordon Head.

Some of the money should also be spent on a municipal ditching enclosure program, Warren suggests.

Only about 500 feet of new construction is needed to connect North Dairy Road with Finlayson, thus providing a direct link between the city's two main shopping malls — Mayfair and Hillside — and allowing for the first time a direct alternative for Hillside Avenue traffic between the Gorge and Shelbourne.

The project entails a new crossing for Bowker Creek at about Wetherby Street.

Man fined $50 for shooting bird

A 50-year-old Jordan River man pleaded guilty Friday in Victoria provincial court to hunting a migratory bird and hunting a migratory bird with a rifle on June 11.

Judge Blake Allan fined Fred Kelly $25 on each count after being assured by Crown counsel Nicholas Lang that the bird was indeed a migratory one which was on the list of species to be protected.

It was a pigeon — but not of the common domestic varieties.

This was a band-tailed pigeon, a wild pigeon of western North America often confused with the extinct passenger pigeon.

Kelly explained that he shot the pigeon near B.C. Hydro power lines at Jordan River because birds had been attacking a cherry tree at his residence. He also said his landlady gave him permission to do so.

B.C. gov't fills senior posts

Al MacPherson has been appointed assistant deputy minister in charge of timber, range and recreation, Forests Minister Tom Waterland has announced.

MacPherson, manager of the Vancouver Forest Region which includes Vancouver Island, will take up his new duties Aug. 1.

He began his forest service career in 1947 as a patrolman in the Nelson district and later served in the Prince George, Prince Rupert and Kamloops forest districts. He took over the Vancouver regional post in September, 1978.

Waterland also announced the appointment of Charles Johnson as director of the silviculture branch. A UBC graduate in forestry, Johnson joined the ministry in 1962 and was in charge of the Vancouver region's siliviculture program for seven years.

In another appointment, Vancouver businessman C.R. Mallory Smith has been appointed chairman of the B.C. Systems Corp., the Crown corporation responsible for government data processing. He replaces Finance Minister Hugh Curtis who served as chairman since his appointment to the finance portfolio last November. Curtis will remain on the board of directors.

Smith, president and chief executive of Koppers International Canada Ltd., has been a BCSC director since March, 1979.

B.C.'s deputy minister of education, meanwhile, has resigned to resume his career at the University of British Columbia.

Dr. Walter Hardwick's resignation, effective Aug. 31, was announced Friday by Education Minister Brian Smith who told the legislature that Hardwick was told by UBC to either return to his post or lose his tenure.

Hardwick will continue to serve as a special consulatant for a month after he resigns and his replacement will be announced shortly, Smith said.

Douglas College Divides...
Two Presidential Opportunities

Background

Douglas is a comprehensive community college serving a broad suburban region of 675,000 within the Lower Mainland. Established in 1970, it provides educational programs on five campuses and at several centres.

The Division

The Ministry of Education and the College Board have decided that the educational needs of this large area can be best served through a re-alignment of the present College effective April 1, 1981 into two institutions, North and South of the Fraser River, under separate Boards. The present College Board will appoint the Chief Executive Officers.

Two Colleges

Both institutions will be multi-campus, comprehensive community colleges offering a wide range of career, vocational, university transfer and continuing education programs. The name "Douglas" will be retained by the North College serving the school districts of New Westminster, Burnaby, Coquitlam and Maple Ridge. A $30 million campus is under construction in New Westminster, with completion expected in the fall of 1982. The institution to the South will serve the school districts of Surrey, Langley, Delta and Richmond. Planning for a permanent campus is now in the developmental stage.

Size

Initial full time student enrolment is projected to be approximately 3,000 for each College, with an additional 5,000 in community and continuing education at each institution. Estimated operating budgets will be in the range of $10 million each.

Presidents' Mandate

The Presidents will be accountable to their respective Boards and as Chief Executive Officers will exercise overall responsibility for the management and operation of the institution. The mandate will include the development and delivery of educational programs; management of financial and administrative systems; liaison with the community, government and external organizations; and relations with the Board and certified bargaining units.

Candidate Profile

Applications are invited from candidates possessing a demonstrated history of senior level educational and administrative leadership, and proven success in working with people from diverse constituencies in educational and community settings. In addition, candidates must have one or more graduate degrees, and substantial post-secondary instructional experience.

The Board wishes to make the appointments as early as possible in order that the successful candidates may assume their duties prior to the re-alignment. The compensation, benefit and perquisite arrangements will reflect the importance and responsibilities of the positions.

Knife-waver gets 18 months

A 24-year-old city man was sentenced Friday to 18 months in jail for his fifth weapons offence.

County court Judge Peter Millward told Bruce Ronald Hawkins he would not send him to the penitentiary — two years or longer — but a one-year sentence suggested by Crown counsel Peter Birkett and defence counsel Malcolm McMicken was not adequate.

Hawkins was found guilty by Millward July 14 of possession of a knife for a purpose dangerous to the public peace. He said Hawkins was a drunken man "mouthing off" at two tow truck drivers while a car was being hooked up for overtime parking at the Century Inn early June 7.

Hawkins waved a knife in a hostile and threatening manner at tow truck driver David Campbell when he jumped on the driver's side of the truck, said Millward.

He said it appeared Hawkins had chosen to follow a certain lifestyle and it didn't matter much whether he was treated one way or another because he returned to his old ways.

He noted Hawkins was now married with a family.

Interplanetary Society

Victoria-based group has sky-high ambition

NAIS founder Tim Lomas and model of famed flight of the Eagle to the moon

By AB KENT

Tim Lomas and his friends can take a rebuff from the United Nations.

Their Victoria-based organization can afford to be generous when its aims encompass not just the community of nations but the whole universe.

It happened last year when the North American Interplanetary Society (NAIS) suggested a way of involving Canada in a proposal to keep Skylab from crashing uselessly to earth.

Lomas and the NAIS make up a group of private citizens — mainly in B.C. — with an interest in the past, present and future of flying, space travel and extraterrestrial colonization.

But they know when a small and unknown group offers advice to history's most prestigious assembly, recognition is liable to be slow, like water drops wearing away a stone.

"We were proposing a sort of outrageous concept. We weren't well known, having been in existence only a year," he said.

Failure to impress the UN is not regarded a total loss.

Lomas considers the experience valuable in establishing NAIS as a concerned group and for the resulting public exposure.

Their executive director, an archeology dropout at university, 25-year-old Lomas feels the society is one of few forums where private people can worry about matters of global significance — like the Moon Treaty that may set a precedent for the future exploration and exploitation of space.

Or when Skylab loomed as not only an unpredictable danger to parts of earth, but a monumental waste of effort, space technology and money, which some believed could have been avoided.

Everyone on earth could be affected by these things. But for some the magnitude of astral and cosmological subjects may defy understanding, while others may never be aware of the problems and uses of space.

And that's where the interplanetary club comes in.

NAIS made its UN appeal in January of last year to the committee on the peaceful uses of outer space, about the time the world learned that Skylab, the U.S. scientific platform launched to do space research, was going out of control.

The U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) and others had already proposed salvaging Skylab using both American and Russian resources. The UN was to take over responsibility and Skylab was to be captured and pushed into a higher, safer orbit using American space station docking gear and a Soviet Soyuz missile.

Lomas wrote on behalf of NAIS to the International Astronautical Federation in Paris; the International Council of Scientific Unions, also in Paris; the government of Canada and to the UN committee urging that this be done.

He suggested an incentive to Russia could be forgiveness of a $6 million payment claimed by Canada from the Soviet government for the cost of cleaning up radioactive Cosmos satellite debris in the Northwest Territories.

The UN committee on the peaceful uses of outer space responded curtly.

"It was about two sentences, something like, 'We are sure the parties involved are aware of the possibilities'," Lomas recalled.

The satellite tumbled into the atmosphere a year ago July 12 and disintegrated into fragments, some weighing tons.

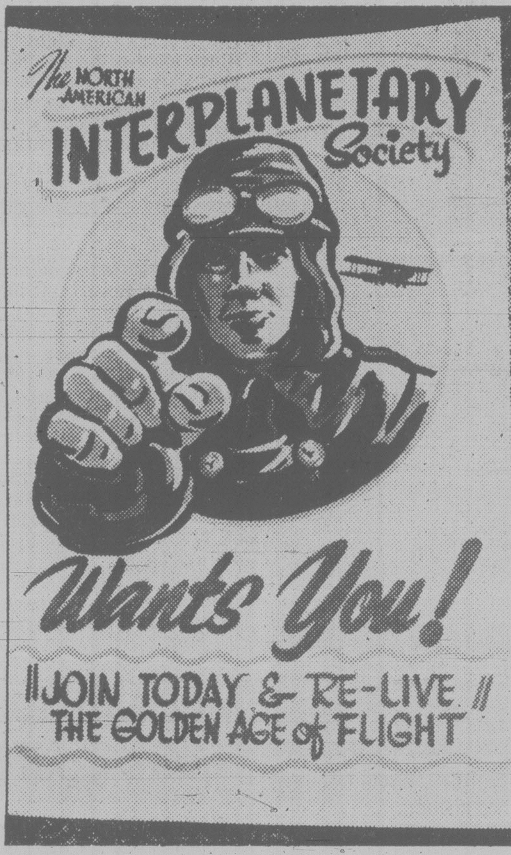
Skylab's usefulness might have been extended for years, since its equipment was still serviceable and may have to be duplicated for the next phase of space satellite development, whenever that takes place.

Lomas said the cost of launching another space lab today could be $2 billion, twice the original cost.

"That's an awful lot of money to let fall in the ocean just because the president of the United States wasn't on very good terms with the president of the Soviet Union."

Since then, the group's global and interplanetary interests have focussed on the proposed Moon Treaty, which it believes is a weak document, parts of which are already covered by UN treaties, conventions and agreement.

For a group of 72 members, the non-profit society's objects are ambitious, perhaps grandiose.



There are 72 members, room for more

Charitable and educational pursuits, stressing Canadian contributions to aviation and space science-technology, are foremost.

Members want a World Aviation and Space Museum to depict the history and future of flying machines, and regional space centres fostering the development of science education in general.

They would like an institute of space science to fund and conduct space research in the fields of engineering, planetology, teaching, exobiology, international affairs, information processing, astrophysics, space industrialization and utilization.

And they are committed to assist and promote the growth of astronomical facilities such as telescopes and planetariums.

NAIS publishes a bimonthly bulletin and a magazine, Space Travel, in which space project developments from the U.S., Russia, France, India, Japan, Germany and other sources are summarized or described in feature articles.

A major difficulty has been financing these efforts and future undertakings, for which NAIS has tried more than two years to get recognition as a charitable organization from Revenue Canada.

"The red tape is indeed thick," Lomas comments.

So far Victorians account for half the membership, with 25 on the Lower Mainland. The rest are scattered thinly through other parts of B.C., Alberta, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Washington and Kansas.

They are aged from 12 years to post-retirement but are mainly youthful and represent diverse backgrounds, including school teachers, a graphic artist, computer programmer, professional model builder, and a couple of private pilots.

Provincial government clerk Marianna McLeod is one of five on the board of directors, along with her mother Maria, a hospital worker, artist Chris Mundigler, federal tax collector Kevin Morgan and Lomas.

Lomas, caught up in aviation and space since the dramatic developments of the '60s, conceived NAIS in the spring of 1978, advertising in the paper for people who "wanted to do something about space, its exploration and utilization."

He said "five or 10 showed up at Central Junior High School for the first meeting, and we decided to incorporate."

Members want "a more active part in the whole subject, a feeling they are doing something," Lomas said.

This could develop into amateur projects like mathematical and physical research into capturing earth-approaching asteroids, known for their high mineral content and a potentially valuable industrial resource.

Members want a museum of flight history, including relic airplanes, and archival and library resource material. NAIS is already a collector of whatever unclassified information it can get its hands on through the various space agencies like NASA.

Discussions and correspondence with the defence department — unsuccessful — have tried to obtain a surplus Argus maritime patrol aircraft. Contact has also been made with the U.S. Air Force Museum and the National Aeronautical Collection in Ottawa for possible surplus military aircraft.

Crown Assets Disposal Corp. told NAIS it was interested in selling the Argus, but only as a fleet to a foreign state.

Lomas notes ruefully it took the national collection 14 years to get one CF-100 all-weather fighter from the Canadian government.

Obtaining display aircraft and a place to put them on show will be costly. A restored aircraft going for $25,000 five years ago may bring $100,000 today, Lomas said, and either price is beyond NAIS which relies on membership fees of $10 a year — $25 with the magazine.

So the group will apply for B.C. lottery funds, will conduct its own lottery and appeal to national corporations for donations to help meet objectives.

And it would be nice, Lomas said, to have some well-off members with money to spend.

Desperate search for detox facility

By BRENDA DALGLISH

The Victoria Detox Centre on McLure Street must close by September 15 and officals are desperately trying to find a building to replace it.

If they aren't able to come up with one, they're afraid people with drinking problems may be "drying out" in jails or the Salvation Army facility.

The detox centre currently houses about 16 people at a time for an average period of three to five days.

Officals seem uncertain about whether a replacement building can be found and prepared before the existing building is closed.

Dr. Mark Fisher, a physician who works with the Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation Society (DARS), said he's worried about the old centre closing before a replacement can be found.

"We in the community have a great reliance on that facility even though it's not the best," Fisher said.

If it didn't exist people would be drying out in jail or in the Salvation Army's Harbor Light facility, which is really geared to assist the skid row alcoholic.

DARS, which is financed by the Alcohol and Drug Commission of the Ministry of Health, runs the Detox Centre.

The executive director and chairman of the board of DARS are both on vacation but checks with other staff and a board member show that finding a new facility is a concern even though the board has known since early this year about the closure.

Not only does a building which can house 16 people plus staff have to be found but the zoning must conform.

Staff of DARS say they are worried objections from neighbors could lead to problems.

DARS board member Pat Murphy said the board expects to have a replacement by the time the centre closes and is considering some buildings.

But some staff members and Dr. Carl Stroh, director of the alcohol services division of the Alcohol and Drug Commission, are less confident.

Stroh said discussions have taken place about combining a detox centre with other types of drug and alcohol treatment centres, including long-term rehabilitation facilities, but now the commission is most concerned with just finding a replacement for the detox centre.

Money isn't a major consideration. The commission will supply funds for buying or leasing a moderately priced building.

Hit-run victim stable

Hit-and-run victim Lawrence Jerome Flynn of Victoria is listed in serious but stable condition in the intensive care unit of Victoria General Hospital today while police continue a search for the driver of the vehicle that struck him.

Flynn was injured Friday on the Trans-Canada Highway at Helmcken.

Police are asking the driver or anyone who witnessed the accident to come forward.

'Strange ship, strange party'

Passengers aboard the Victoria Princess' evening runs between Seattle and Victoria and back to Seattle on Friday evening couldn't believe their eyes when they went aboard.

There it was, Christmas in July.

Colored lights, Christmas trees and decorations set the decor. Even Santa was aboard, taking time out from his normal chores as Chief Catering Officer Tommy Banks.

The ferry's crew of between 70 and 80 had decided to throw themselves a Christmas party, complete with an exchange of gifts.

As one crew member put it, "We're on a strange ship, why not a strange party."

Helicopter rescues city woman

The search and rescue helicopter from Comox armed forces base rescued a hiker Friday who broke her leg while travelling the West Coast Trail.

Alice Wilkins of Victoria is listed in good condition at Royal Jubilee Hospital after arriving by helicopter.

She was injured at the northwest end of the trail near Pachena Point.

Fee hassle remains in limbo

The fee dispute between psychologists and the provincial government is still unresolved but a third meeting to discuss the situation will be held next Wednesday.

Representatives of the B.C. Psychological Association met Government Employees Relations Bureau officials Friday to work out a fee agreement that would get consulting psychologists back to work for provincial agencies.

Clifford Spence, manager of management compensation for GERB said today the Wednesday meeting has been called and that so far talks have been positive.

A number of psychologists have refused to work for the province since GERB reduced their fees for 3 1/2 hours to $60 from $120.

Since then GERB offered fees between $80 and $110 but the psychologists have not backed down.

Region to check on risk of PCP leaks in Tod Inlet

Regional board director Dave Hill of Central Saanich said today he will check with Hartland Road waste disposal staff Monday on the possibility of toxic contamination in Tod Creek.

He said he was concerned about reports of PCP (pentachloraphenol) sludge from Plumper Bay Sawmills Ltd. being dumped in the landfill, and the possibility of it leaching into Tod Inlet near Brentwood and Butchart Gardens.

In high concentration PCP is a deadly poison. It is used in wood preservatives and is present in sludge taken from plywood mill diptanks.

At B.C. Forest Products Ltd. mill in Victoria, the material is burned in boiler furnaces, but the company denies a report that toxic fumes are being discharged into the atmosphere.

"The amount of PCP being disposed of in our boiler furnaces is extremely small," said general manager James Warr. "It decomposes into its basic elements and reacts to form a harmless salt."

Murray Drew, safety director for International Woodworkers of America Victoria local, said he had been informed a much higher temperature was needed to destroy the PCP contaminant.

Earlier, B.C. Environment Minister Stephen Rogers said he would enquire into BCFP's disposal practice for PCP.

Plumper Bay manager Tirjeet Johl said Hartland dump was used to dispose of the preservative sludge because no other facility is available. He urges the provincial government to correct the situation.

Hill said the Capital Regional District is spending money to solve the problem of leaching undesireable elements through runoff drainage into watercourses.

"There is no doubt, the way the dump is located, water from winter rains picks up iron," Hill said.

The region had built holding ponds at the base of the dump to collect leach water, and pumps this liquid back to the top of the landfill, where through evaporation and irrigation of grasses the unwanted elements are deposited.

Hill said the project has been monitored about 18 months, and notes the site itself is good only for about another five years of dumping. However, leaching could be a problem for 50 years, he pointed out.

Hill suggested PCP may be treated like waste oil, which is dumped on clay soil to prevent leaching.

HIGH CLIMBERS will be in evidence from now on at Lambrick Park after dedication of instructional playground equipment by Miles Primrose of Gordon Head Kiwanis Club, which purchased and assembled apparatus behind Gordon Head pool. On hand for ceremony were Saanich Ald. Mary Casilio and parks administrator Frank Andrews, interested parents and, of course, children.

Victoria lifeguards winners

A team from a Victoria company that trains lifeguards won the annual provincial lifeguard competition Friday in McKinnon Pool at the University of Victoria.

A total of 11 three-man teams from across the province competed for the Barnsley Sheild.

A team from Advanced Lifeguard Training, made up of Stan Anderson, Les Fisher and Bruce McKinnon, took first place in the competition.

Fisher and McKinnon are lifeguards at Thetis Lake and Anderson is an instructor with the company.

Lifeguard competition is made up of two types of events, first aid and handling emergencies.

Moscow 'robbery' charges increase

MOSCOW (AP) — An Australian athlete charged today that he was robbed of a probable gold medal in the triple jump Friday and thus joined a growing list of disgruntled competitors in the Olympic Games.

"They said I fouled by dragging my right foot at the end of the step," said Ian Campbell, a senior at Washington State University. "I definitely did not foul and many others, including even Russians, backed me up.

"When I demanded an English interpreter and appealed for the track referee, the judge just shrugged and had the area raked. I had no other recourse, then. I am sick over it."

Campbell said the jump was at least 57 feet 6 inches, beating the Olympic record of the Soviet Union's Viktor Saneyev (17.39 meters or 57 feet, ¾ inch) and bettering the 17.35 meters (56-11) of the Soviet winner, Jaak Uudmae, an Estonian. Saneyev, seeking his fourth consecutive gold medal in the event, finished second.

Campbell, who had led the field in Thursday's qualifying round, said a British team official had given him a film that clearly showed his jump was legal. But he was officially placed fifth.

"Joao de Oliviera of Brazil also had big jumps, only to have them disqualified also," said Campbell. "Between us, eight of our 12 jumps were called fouls.

"The Brazilians have demanded an investigation. Everybody says both of us were robbed."

On Wednesday, the country's Carlos Giron was beaten out for the gold medal in springboard diving by Aleksander Portnov of the Soviet Union who was given an extra dive after complaining he was bothered by crowd noise. When another diver made the same complaint, his request for another dive was turned down.

On Friday, Mexico's defending champion in the 20-kilometre walk, Daniel Bautista, was pulled off the track by a Russian judge when he was leading the race only one kilometre from the finish. The anger was not abated by the fact the Soviet Union's Anatoly Solomin, was yanked about the same time for the same offence — breaking the gait.

Feeling throughout Mexico was so intense that special security forces had to be posted around the Soviet embassy in Mexico City.

This was mild compared with the outburst in Romania after that country's gymnastics darling, Nadia Comaneci, was deprived of a gold medal in the all-round competition Thursday after a scoring hassle.

However, Comaneci's coach finally won an argument with the judges Friday and the embattled teen-ager emerged as the only woman to win two individual gold medals in women's gymnastics at the Olympic Games.

The 18-year-old triple gold medallist at the 1976 Games, who narrowly lost the all-round title to Yelena Davydova of the Soviet Union on Thursday night, reversed the placings Friday in the balance beam and shared the title in floor exercises with Nelli Kim, the Russian defending champion.

All three decisions sparked bitter debates.

With seven victories in the 15 events on Friday's program, the Russians ran their total of gold medals to 34.

For the first time since the Games opened, no world records were broken. In fact, Allan Wells of Britain won the men's 100-metre dash in 10.26 seconds, the slowest time in an Olympic final since 1956.

A Games record fell in the women's javelin, won by Maria Colon of Cuba with a heave of 68.40 metres.

In men's gymnastics Aleksandr Dityatin, the all-round champion, confirmed his status by winning a medal in all six individual disciplines including a gold on the rings. As a member of the winning Soviet team, he finished with three golds, four silvers and a bronze, the most won by an athlete in a single Olympics in the modern era.

Dityatin's team-mate, Nikolai Andrianov, the 1976 all-round winner, defended his title in the vault and Zoltan Magyar of Hungary was a repeat winner on the side horse.

A third Russian, Aleksandr Tkachyov, on the parallel bars, Stoyan Deltchev of Bulgaria on the side horse and Roland Bruckner of East Germany in floor exercises were the other gold medallists.

After the shouting matches between the judges and Romanian team officials that attended Comaneci's loss to Davydova in the women's all-round Thursday night, peace reigned during the men's events Friday.

Friday's first two women's finals also passed without incident as Russian Natalia Shaposhnikova took the title in the vault and 15-year-old Maxi Knauck of East Germany won on the uneven bars. Neither Comaneci nor Davydova earned a medal in either event.

But both were clearly in the running for the balance beam title and there was a five-minute delay after Davydova, the last contestant, completed her performance. When her mark of 9.90 went up, the crowd howled in protest, since it left her five-hundredths of a point behind the Romanian.

Finally, when Russian veteran Nelli Kim was declared the winner in floor exercises, Romanian coach Bela Karolyi, who had earned an official rebuke for his vigorous arguments on Comaneci's behalf Thursday, again rushed to the judges' table.

After a brief discussion, five-hundredths of a point were added to Comaneci's score giving her a first-place tie with Kim, the 1976 winner. The official explanation was that there had been a computer error.

Britons Sebastian Coe and Steve Ovett won their semi-final heats and headed for a showdown in Sunday's 800-metres final. Another Briton, Daley Thompson, held a healthy lead and was in striking distnce of the world record at the halfway point in the decathlon.

A distinguished Rock has his own honor roll

They honored Ranjit Dillon at the Shamrock-Coquitlam game Wednesday night and, like the true sportsman he is, he returned the favor to some of the people on his honor roll.

Ranjit noted, after receiving a standing ovation, there were others who deserved mention.

— The Kowalyks — Norm, the late general manager of the club, and Ed, player, coach and now a director; Chris Randall, the former club president; Mason Sheldrick, the quiet but completely dedicated man behind the scenes for so long; Ivan Thompson, as the finest lacrosse player he ever had the privilege of playing with; and his own brother Nirmal.

No arguments there. The note about Thompson probably caught most by surprise, because he singled out one man, above all others, as being the best there was.

This from a player who himself had accumulated over 1,100 points was a stunner and a tribute indeed. But if anybody knows, Ranjit should. He's been there all the time, it seems, during the lows and highs and until this year. And Ivan's been there too, and both of them when needed most.

It never was any secret in the past few years that when the Irish were in trouble, the two fellows sent over the boards the most often were No. 5, now retired — that's Ranjit — and No. 18, Thompson, also mothballed.

And it's no secret either that with them on the floor, the opposition rarely took liberties, particularly on the odd-man play. Their over-all play, pin-point passing and general deportment always was a joy to behold and they were two players who helped make the game more enjoyable to these tired eyes.

They played the game for the game's sake, played it well, and always were sportsmen of the first kind. This isn't the case with many others in the game today. But that's another story and has no place here.

And Ranjit mentioned Nirmal, his brother, as being responsible, he thought, for the team that finally won the Mann Cup last year, even though Nirmal wasn't around in an official capacity to enjoy it.

That took a lot of doing and I'm glad he did. Nirmal was coach of the Irish for three years, had them on top or near the top all during that time, but was unceremoniously dumped last year. His sin was losing the Mann Cup series in Peterborough the summer before.

So it's maudlin time, is it? I can go along with that.

There have been many Irish stars through the years. All have received their measure of success and rewards, but none, until now, have had their number retired. That, to Ranjit, was everything. And Ranjit said it for everyone: "I thought winning the Mann Cup last year would be the biggest thrill of my career but this is a bigger one."

But the season goes on, without Ranjit (and Ivan) and the Rocks are right back in the hunt, it appears, for another Mann Cup berth. And about time too.

They never looked better this season than they did Wednesday in trimming Coquitlam's Adanacs. And it was the defence that played its part to perfection, just as it has done through much, but not all, of this season. The defenders seldom get noted or win game stars. They just do their job and, in the battle of intimidation which Coquitlam usually plays so well, the Irish showed them something in return. And about time, too.

In addition, when did the Rocks ever before have two players in position to finish one, two in the league scoring race. Never, that I can recall and that goes back through some storied days.

And I caught part of a TV program the other day before the Irish knocked off the Adanacs in Coquitlam Saturday night. Coach Joe McCrea was suggesting to a questioner that he wasn't about to change the playing ways of Kevin Alexander or Jim Lynch just because they weren't the best checkers on the club.

"Who am I," he said, "to tell Kevie how to play. He knows only one way — put the ball in the net. That's what he does best and better than anyone else. And Lynch he can thread a needle with the ball."

Joe could have added: they complement one another very well.

Now if the Rocks don't go and blow first place, all may be well again.

Even Ranjit and Ivan should agree.

Weslock wins seniors' title by 15 strokes

Callan captures crown

Victoria's Nancy Callan Friday scored a one-stroke victory over Maureen MacDonald of Vernon to win the British Columbia junior women's golf championship in Vancouver.

Callan, 15, of Uplands, fired a final-round 83 over the 6,165-yard Fraserview course and finished with a 36-hole total of 164. The Victoria girl, who was runner-up to Dawn Coe of Lake Cowichan last year, also captured the juvenile (15-and-under) title and combined with Megan Moore of Gorge Vale to bring the team title to District One.

Callan, MacDonald and Linda Jervis of Pitt Meadows all qualified for the B.C. team to compete in the Canadian junior championships in London, Ont., next month.

Elsewhere in golf:

In Winnipeg Friday, Erin Ray Fostey of Barrie, Ont., took a two-stroke lead on the first day of the Manitoba Open, shooting a six-under-par 66.

Defending-champion Jerry Anderson of Ontario posted a 68 and was second in the field of 58 professionals and 80 amateurs.

Fostey's round was one stroke off the record of 65 set by Dan Halldorson of Manitoba two years ago.

Halldorson shot a 71 Friday and was tied with Victorians John Morgan and Bob Beauchemin.

Jim Rutledge of Victoria fired a 72 and former-Victorian Cec Ferguson of Regina had a 73

And in Saskatoon, Nick Weslock won his fourth Canadian senior men's golf championship — to no one's great surprise.

The 62-year-old Burlington, Ont., resident carded a par 72 for a three-round total of 213 and a 15-stroke lead over his nearest opponent. It was his 399th tournament triumph.

On the pro golf circuit, Jim Simmons shot a one-under-par 70 Friday for a 132 two-round total and a one-stroke lead over Lee Trevino in the Greater Hartford Open at Wethersfield, Conn.

And at Jericho, N.Y., Sally Little, winner of the LPGA title earlier this year, fired a one-under-par 71 to share the lead with Patty Hayes at 140 after 36 holes of the $125,000 tournament.

Blues top Mariners

For the second night in a row Friday the Victoria Blues toppled the Bellingham Mariners.

Following their 5-3 win before a crowd of 950 in Bellingham Thursday night, Blues again won by two runs — this time with a score of 9-7 — Friday night to open a three-game Northwest Baseball League home series before 438 fans at Royal Athletic Park.

The teams meet tonight at 7 and again Sunday at 1 p.m. and right now the Mariners are six-and-a-half games ahead of the Blues in the league's Northern Division.

The Mariners have a 25-12 win-loss record while the Blues have evened theirs off at 17-17 with their Friday night win.

Results of tonight's and Sunday's games will have an important part to play in deciding whether or not the Blues' pennant hopes are realized.

"We have to beat them," Blues playing-manager Jim Gattis said after Friday night's game. "Nobody else is going to do it for us."

Gattis said Bellingham is a good team with great hitting and he pointed out that even on Friday night, when they didn't hit well they still got seven runs.

Blues batters unleashed 14 hits against three Mariner pitchers, including three by catcher Don Hyman, who cracked his first home run of the season in thesecond inning.

Singles by Gary Humpston, Lozando Washington and Paul Kirsch brought three more runs in the third inning. And in the seventh inning, Richie Archie and Rod Murphy drive in runs.

McLean 'loses interest' quits post with Bruins

CALGARY — Ernie "Punch" McLean has resigned as general manager of the Western Hockey league's New Westminster Bruins.

The club was purchased from McLean and partner Bill Shinske about a month ago by Nelson Skalbania who controls the Calgary Flames of the National Hockey League.

McLean has been with the Bruins since their inception in Estevan, Sask., nearly two decades ago.

But Flames assistant general manager David Poile said McLean was not pleased with his position in New Westminster. He quoted McLean as saying Thursday he had "lost interest" in the club since it was sold.

McLean also wanted a position with the Flames organization directly and there was nothing available, Poile said, adding that outside interests were also occupying much of McLean's time.

Muzz Macpherson, New Westminster's coach, will serve as the team's director of player personnel in addition to his coaching duties, Poile said.

General manager Cliff Fletcher has appointed Ian McKenzie co-ordinator of scouting and Gerry Blair the chief scout.

Four more for Joe

Meet-leading driver Joe Hudon continues to set the pace at Sandown Raceway, despite the fact that he is awaiting word on the outcome of his appeal of a suspension imposed on him last week by B.C. Racing Commission judges.

Allowed to race in the meantime, Hudon reined his way to four victories and piloted two other horses to second-place finishes at Sandown Friday.

Two of his winners — Commando Jove in the eighth race and Shady Hill Vicki in the ninth — were hot favorites and paid only $3.20 and $3.30 for $2 wagers.

However, Hudon guided Cedarwood Champ home first in the fourth race for a $7.10 return and his other winner, Nechako Taffy, paid $9.40 for a win in the fifth.

Cedarwood Champ and Holridge Cindy, driven by Miles Armstrong, produced an exactor payout of $168.20, biggest of the day on which a crowd of 1,213 wagered $100,664.

Money was one of the major targets as competition continued today in the 14-team men's softball tournament at Macdonald Park where Heywood Avenue League officials are attempting to raise $2,000 for the Pearkes Clinic for handicapped children.

In regular Heywood League play, Duane Bertrand doubled and scored the winning run on a seventh-inning single by Bernie Talbot as Victoria Athletics nipped Capital Builders 7-6 at Heywood Park.

In the Macdonald Park Men's League, Terry James was in fine hitting form with a grand-slam homer as James Bay Inn edged Labatts 7-5.

And in Victoria-Saanich Women's League play at Hyacinth Park, Tillicum Shoppers Drug Mart toppled leading Island Dryco Breakers 3-1. Winning pitcher was Karen Perkins, who threw a five-hitter, striking out four and giving up one walk.

Travis talks school scheme away

Twenty-year-old Victoria entrepreneur Dermod Travis, who announced this week he was spearheading a group of businessmen interested in purchasing Shawnigan Lake's Strathcona Lodge School, may have talked himself out of the deal.

John Roberts, a Calgary chartered accountant whom Travis described as his business manager, was appalled the proposal had been made public.

Travis' announcement, he said, was premature.

"I think it may have finished any interest I might have had in it," Roberts said in an interview today from his home in Calgary. "He may well have talked himself out of the deal altogether."

Travis told the Times earlier this week he hoped to raise money through Alberta investors to purchase the exclusive girl's school which shut down in June, 1977.

The school, made up of nine buildings on 22 acres on the east side of Shawnigan Lake, had originally been listed for sale at $2.9 million. But the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which has owned the property since Jan., 1979, indicated it was seriously considering a Travis-lead proposal to purchase the school for $1.6 million.

Travis said that under the proposal the school would be re-named the Institute of Modern Studies, have an enrolment of 184.

Fees for students, the majority of whom would be non-Canadian residents, would run $10,000 to $12,000 a year.

Travis said he had "agents" in Hong King and the Persian Gulf promoting the venture and had already lined up 16 students to attend the school scheduled to reopen in September, 1981.

Roberts was aghast.

"I don't want to harm Travis. He's young. But he's talking through his hat when he talks about me as his business manager.

"It is a true fact he has an idea and it is a true fact I was interested in sending it in to investors to consider. But it was a long way off from doing something."

Roberts said he wasn't involved except in "getting people together" to act as backers.

"I do have clients capable of doing it and capable of running it. But I don't think they or I want to get involved if people can't use discretion."

Roberts called Travis' proposal for an exclusive private school "simply absurd."

"That's part of an old idea. I wouldn't have anything to do with it. It's not viable."

Tire check finds inflation trouble

Nine out of 10 cars checked during a recent tire safety campaign sponsored by the Arbutus Jaycees and Butler Tire had tires which were not inflated properly.

Industry studies show that improper inflation not only reduces tire life, but also affects driving safety and vehicle performance.

The campaign was sponsored to make drivers more aware of the importance of having proper tires. About 70 cars were checked.

Results of the check also showed that about four per cent of the cars checked had tires with too little tread for safe use, about 16 per cent showed signs of unusual tread wear indicating improper balance or alignment, and eight per cent were in need of immediate replacement because of cuts, cracks, blisters or other conditions.

"These results demonstrate the need for Victoria area motorists to pay more attention to their tires," said Marnie Woykin, external vice-president of the jaycees.

'Jaws' clamps suit

DEWEY BEACH, Del. (UPI) — A Wilmington woman standing in four feet of water was attacked by a shark that grabbed her bathing suit and dragged her about 10 feet through the water, said state police.

Police said Phyllis Riley, 22, was not injured.

Sea Fest to ante up for policing

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Sea Festival intends to reimburse the city as much as possible for the $100,000 spent on extra policing, traffic control and clean-up at this year's festivities.

Festival chairman Graham Clarke made the disclosure after a meeting Friday with city officials.

The festival cost the city $100,000, $75,000 of which was for extra policing, including RCMP, and the remainder was for traffic control and clean-up. This is in addition to a $20,000 grant from the city.

Clarke said he wasn't sure how much money the festival had, but believed there would be some to partly repay the city. The festival is a non-profit organization. No figures were available from previous years for a cost comparison.

Parent group presses case

Glanford Parents' Group chairman David Douglas said today he appreciates the support of Royal Oak ratepayers in urging development of recreation facilities in that area of Saanich.

Both ratepayers and the school children's group want action now, and are not prepared to wait until Saanich population jumps 20,000 to about 100,000, as suggested in a professional study to justify major recreation installations.

That could take 10 years, and at present there is nothing to serve the expanding residential-commercial area, Douglas points out.

A park, playground, indoor facilities — anything — would be an improvement, he said. Although a recreation complex would be ideal, there is at least the need for a swimming pool, he added.

"We think we have a potent argument in the children's future and we feel it speaks for itself," Douglas said.

His group intends to cooperate with other groups aiming for the same ends, but since the group speaks mainly for children it wants to maintain its own voice.

Douglas suggested others may be concerned for other reasons, pointing out that the ratepayers have a much wider base in the community.

Saanich council is expected to address itself in September to a survey conducted by Professional Environmental Recreation Consultants of Surrey.

Wreck gores Dutch field

UTRECHT, Netherlands (UPI) — Two diesel-powered passenger trains collided head-on Friday on a fog shrouded single-line track across flat meadowland in northeastern Holland, killing at least nine persons and injuring more than 20.

The collision took place about 7:25 a.m. local time on a three-mile stretch of single track that is controlled by radio instructions to engineers rather than by automatic signals.

The system has worked for over 12 years with only one near miss some years ago.

Skiers set ice-cap mark

SOENDRE STROEMFJORD, Greenland (AP) — Eight young cross-country skiers from Minnesota battled Arctic storms, forded waist-deep, ice-choked rivers and gingerly crossed ice crevasses to complete a 600-kilometre ski trek across Greenland's ice cap Friday in a record time of 35 days.

The expedition, led by Paul Erickson, 28, of Concordia College, Moorhead, Minn., started on the east coast of the world's largest island at Angmagsalik, with 50 days' supplies.

The first man to make the trip, over a different route, was Norwegian Arctic explorer Fridtjof Nansen. He made it in 43 days in 1888. The only other recorded ski trek was by a Scottish expedition in 1965 that took 38 days.

In a telephone interview with The Associated Press, Erickson said he was pleasantly surprised by the natural beauty the party saw.

There were "fantastically beautiful ice formations" and gorgeous sunsets and sunrises to greet them as they skied through the night, he said.

Erickson praised the four women on the expedition: "They performed as well as the men and they were very strong, both physically and psychologically."

The other skiers, all from Minnesota, were: T. Brice Addison, 24, and his 25-year-old wife Shelley of Rochester; Sandi Jo Brady, 23, of Minneapolis; Mary Margaret Klein, 24, of St. Paul; Cheryl Montain, 23, of Minneapolis; Dennis Cuchna, 21, of Clarissa and John Stavig, 23, of Moorhead. They were accompanied by ABC photographer Beverley Johnson.

Erickson said the extreme cold caused the fibre-glass sleds to crack, and there was no way to make repairs.

"I guess the old timers were wiser to have sled of wood bound with leather because they could be easily repaired," he added.

Billy storm moves to A-G

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — The U.S. justice department is conducting an internal investigation of Attorney-General Benjamin Civiletti after he disclosed that he and President Carter discussed Billy Carter's ties to Libya before the government concluded its probe of the president's brother.

There was the possibility the president himself might be called upon to testify, sources said.

Civiletti said Friday he talked privately with the president on June 17 about Billy Carter's relationship with the Libyan government. But he denied revealing anything of the department investigation of the president's younger brother, which led eventually to Billy Carter's registration as an agent for Libya.

The attorney-general told reporters he advised the president that his brother probably would not be prosecuted if he belatedly registered as an agent of Libya's radical Arab government.

Both Civiletti and the White House had previously denied any such discussion took place.

But Jody Powell, the president's chief spokesman, said Civiletti's revelation came after Carter discovered a reminder of the conversation as he checked his personal notes.

Shortly after Civiletti disclosed his conversation with the president, the justice department's office of professional responsibility opened an inquiry to determine whether the attorney-general's action violated the law or department rules concerning disclosure of matters under investigation.

Racial tension eases

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (UPI) — The passions that sparked three nights of racial violence cooled early today as police patrols were replaced by groups of black citizens led by ministers — a proposal of the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

"Everything is going lovely," said the Rev. O.D. Whiteside, president of the Minister's Association and head of the "Neighborhood Patrol" at the Spencer McCallie housing project, where eight police officers were sprayed with shotgun pellets Thursday night.

Squads of SWAT officers remained at a command post about a mile from the projects, however, and a dusk-to-dawn curfew remained in effect. Officials termed the 68 over-night arrests for curfew violations and eight firebombings minor when compared to the previous three nights.

The aquittal of two members of a Klan splinter group on Tuesday by an all-white jury provided the spark that touched off the disorders.

Israel exit by Nov. 15 UN thrust

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — Non-aligned states formally proposed Friday night that the General Assembly call on Israel to withdraw totally and unconditionally by Nov. 15 from Arab lands occupied since 1967.

The draft resolution was expected to be put to a vote Monday or Tuesday.

The resolution was tabled on the fourth day of the assembly's emergency session on the Palestinian question after Egypt joined the stream of speakers who denounced Israeli policy

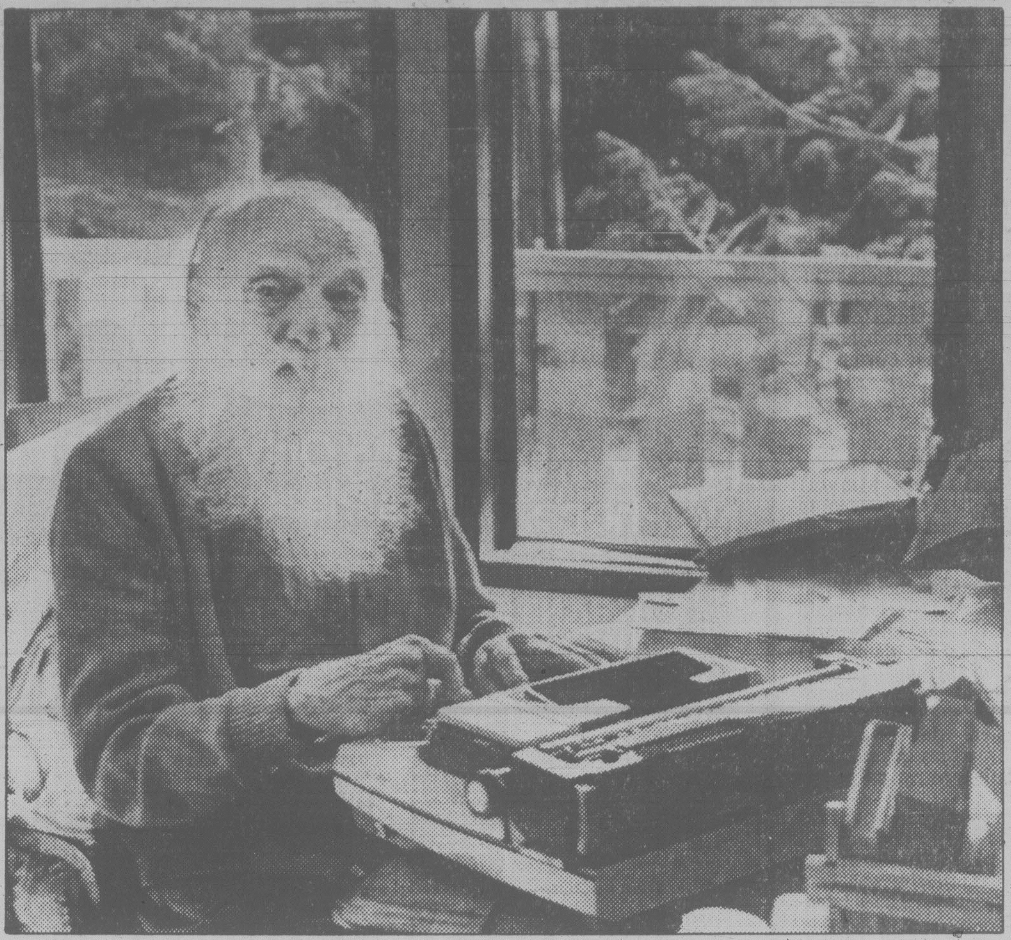
Lives of lay saints show way

Oblate's writings record vignettes



Widdowson at work in his Metchosin home

The life of the lay saint can provide an inspiration to many people in contemporary religious life, according to Gregory Widdowson, a lay Oblate attached to Westminster Abbey, in Mission, B.C.

Widdowson, a former Anglican clergyman who converted to Roman Catholicism and became a lay Oblate in 1944, has written a book on the lives of a number of saints, ranging from the Holy Family itself through the early and modern martyrs to modern-day candidates for canonization.

The book, An Outline of Lay Sanctity, was published last year by Our Sunday Visitor., Inc., of Huntington, Indiana, and has an imprimatur from Bishop William McManus, of Fort Wayne-South Bend, Ind.

Widdowson said the book has been well received in the U.S., where some 1,500 copies have been sold—many to Protestants, including some with religious traditions that exclude saints—but he has so far had difficulty in generating interest in sales in Canada.

The author presents delightful, easy-to-read biographical vignettes which offer a history of lay sanctity through the ages, throwing new light on the lives and times of well-known saints and martyrs.

Among them are St. Thomas More, Margaret of Scotland, Elizabeth of Hungary, Edward the Confessor, and some lesser-known but equally inspiring holy personalities such as Angelia of Foligno and Prosper of Aquitaine.

The book ends with a bonus, a program to stimulate a personal renewal to help one's vision of spiritual matters become clearer.

Widdowson points out in an introduction the vast difference between the priestly and lay states, noting that a member of a religious order has work that keeps before his eyes "the spiritual requirements of human nature, and the good examples of those who have gone before him. While as for the layman, what his daily life keeps him in mind of is some aspect of earthly existence."

He says that while many people are devoted to saints in the hopes of obtaining by their intercession some benefit or other, "if the matter is seriously considered, it becomes apparent that that intercession is more profitably employed when we seek their help in the imitation of their virtues as a step to our following the supreme good example of Christ himself."

Widdowson, now 78 and practically bedridden due to a back injury, said the inspiration for the book came while he was corresponding with John Cardinal Wright, until his death two years ago the highest ranking U.S. prelate in the Roman curia.

When he pointed out there were no works for the common man offering inspiration from the lives of the saints, the cardinal suggested he write one himself.

He said he hopes the book will be of broad appeal, and not just designed for conservative followers of the church.

Widdowson, who lives in Metchosin, is a chemistry and theology graduate of Oxford, England, and did early research on the breakdown of the uranium atom at Oxford before coming to Canada as a minister shortly before the Second World War.

Today's cathedral set features voice, piano

This is the 18th year for the recital series which is held during July and August.

Women leaders on visit to Israel

A group of prominent American and Canadian women leaders are visiting Israel this week. The contingent of women arrived there on July 13 and their trip to the Middle East coincides with the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women being held in Copenhagen.

These women, representing broad and diverse constituencies in North America, are the first participants in the Jerusalem Women's Seminar—a significant new program.

Iona Campagnolo, former member of Parliament from British Columbia is among seminar delegates.

CAMPAGNOLO
. . . B.C. delegate

The objective of the seminar is to encourage dialogue among women who represent the three major religious denominations which have historic ties to the city of Jerusalem.

Elaine Dubow of Montreal and Phyllis Kaminsky of Washington, D.C., founders and co-ordinators of the seminar, have been involved in various philanthropic and public affairs projects in the United States, Canada, Europe and the Middle East. Both women visited Egypt in June, 1979, to familiarize themselves with the woman's role in a Moslem society.

Ella Grasso, governor of Connecticut and a member of the sponsor committee, expressed the hope "that the Jerusalem Women's Seminar will succeed in furthering the efforts of all who seek a peaceful world in which human rights and opportunities are assured for every person."

In addition to the twin goals of inter-religious dialogue and cultural exchange, the seminar will provide the opportunity for the participants to spend time with leading Israeli women of matched professional backgrounds, with whom they can share work experiences, exchange personal ideas and discuss common goals.

Pope begins releasing priests

VATICAN CITY (UPI)—Pope John Paul II has begun releasing some of the 4,000 priests who want out of their vows, but he will soon adopt a strict new policy making such dispensations difficult to obtain, Vatican sources have reported.

They said he began reviewing the backlog of 4,000 requests early last week and had already released about 50 priests from their vows, the number he plans to consider each week while he is not traveling.

John Paul had halted all "laicizations" shortly after he was elected pope in October 1978 in an attempt to stem the tide of about 30,000 priests who left the church during the reign of the late Pope Paul VI. The Vatican sources said he wanted time to consider a new policy on the touchy subject.

"I think the pope felt there was too much of a free-for-all during the time of Pope Paul," said the deputy secretary of a major religious order.

"The reaction after the Second Vatican Council was to give a free hand to anybody to change his decision," he said. "It seems that John Paul is more traditional and was trying to clamp down on things before proceeding. He wanted to study the question and set a precedent and adopt a new policy."

The sources did not say whether the dispensation requests being granted included release from vows of celibacy as well as priestly vows. The two are treated separately by the Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, the Vatican organization that processes such requests and makes recommendations to the pope.

The Vatican sources indicated the pope would be lenient with priests ordained during Paul's pontificate because the high number of dispensations granted by the late pontiff led seminarians to believe the priesthood was only "semi-permanent."

All the church sources said John Paul has come under pressure recently from bishops — particularly those in Brazil — who want to know how to deal with the many men who are leaving the priesthood without formal release from their vows.

They said some bishops even warned the pope he might be confronted by protest marches of former priests during his upcoming 12-day visit to Brazil.

Clergy raps Vatican

TORONTO (CP) — A Vatican decision to transfer priests from prosperous countries to underdeveloped nations has been described by some Canadian church officials as a grandiose and impractical scheme mind-boggling in its implications.

"My God, we have an aging clergy here according to our own surveys," said one Roman Catholic official. "Are they going to send these guys to the Amazon or some place where they don't speak the language, don't know the culture and can't understand the rigors of the climate?"

A document released Tuesday at the Vatican said there has been a sharp drop in the number of priests in the last 10 years.

Historic chapels tour focus

The historic churches and chapels of rural Saanich will be the subject of a tour by the Victoria Heritage Building Foundation of the Hallmark Society on Sunday.

An Edwardian style picnic, or fete champetre, will be a high point of the six-hour outing, said University of Victoria architectural historian Martin Segger, who is conducting the tour.

Among 10 churches to be visited and examined are the 1863 carpenter gothic St. Stephen's and the 1930s collegiate chapel of Brentwood College.

Segger said the Saanich Peninsula is unique for its numerous historic churches and chapels surviving in a near original country setting.

It is hoped the tour will inform people about the beauty and value of this unusual heritage which is seriously threatened as urban sprawl spreads throughout the Saanich peninsula.

The tour will leave Bastion Square at 10:45 a.m. Sunday, returning by 5 p.m. The cost of $25 a person includes the picnic.

For reservations contact the Hallmark Society at 384-3694 or 388-6562. Funds raised through the tour will go to the Jackson House appeal of the Heritage Building Foundation.

Perspectives

By Rev. John A. Davidson

We are living through a great technological revolution. Challenging new problems, personal and social and political, are left in the wake of every scientific and technological advance. Our minds are befuddled and our hearts torn by what it is now fashionable to call "future shock."

The Church, like other institutions, finds difficulty in adjusting to new circumstances and new forces. For many today the Church is increasingly irrelevant to the basic concerns of their lives. Anyone who thinks that the Church today has the favored position it had as recently as 20 years ago just hasn't been taking the evidence seriously.

It is obvious that the Church must re-tool if it is to exercise effective mission in this new era. It must communicate and demonstrate the resources in its faith that can help prevent the new technological civilization from becoming a dehumanizing monstrosity, resources that can help persons to a sense of life's deepest meanings and ultimate purposes. It must declare the basic realities of its faith and teach the creative disciplines that can heal hurt hearts and disturbed minds and help persons to fulfilment in their lives.

But in trying to do this the Church must not allow itself to become ingrown, a preserve of private piety, an introverted fellowship. The only Christian approach that will count in this new era is the one that moves out into the hurly-burly and strives to put the leaven of faith into all departments of life, coming to redeeming terms with new circumstances and new challenges.

The Church, of course, must concern itself with individual spirituality and morality. But it repudiates its Lord if it does not involve itself in social and political concerns—with health and poverty in all parts of the world, with menaces to the environment, with war and peace, with issues of justice and liberty, with everything that keeps persons from fulfilment.

This is not a denial of the New Testament passion for the redemption of the individual, but it does recognize, as the New Testament recognizes, that the individual cannot be taken out of his or her full social situation.

No sharp distinctions can be drawn between the individual and the social aspects of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. No approach in evangelism should try to separate concern for the individual and concern for society as a whole. Both individual pietism and social activism are for Christians heresies when they are not held together as simply two emphases of the Gospel.

It is a sin for a Christian to try to move into a religious storm-cellar where the winds of change can be evaded and where one can coddly oneself in a cozy, private piety.

(Dr. Davidson is minister of Dominion-Chalmers United Church, Ottawa.)

Summer series continues

The eighth in the summer series of Gospel services in Beacon Hill Park will be held at the Cameron bandshell on Sunday evening at 7 o'clock.

It will be by Queens Avenue Apostolic Church, with Pastor Alan McLean speaking on the subject of God's Answer to Man's Dilemma.

Ken Ball will be master of ceremonies, and Barbara McLean the accompanist. Two young people will give personal testimonies of Christian witness.

The musical portion will be provided by an orchestra, a brass trio, violin solo by Joy Ball, and vocal numbers including solos by Ken Oliphant, Elaine Grayson and Barbara McLean, duets by the pastor and his wife and by Ken and Joy Ball, and mixed trio of Robin McLean and Tammy and Mell Ball.

There will be a musical prelude at 6:45 p.m.

These special Gospel services are in their 38th year and sponsored by Park Services Interdenominational.

Reform synagogue sold — now a Mormon chapel

Across Canada

Canadian Press

MONTREAL— The Jewish congregation moved out, the Mormon congregation moved in, and Beth Shalom Synagogue now is a chapel.

The reform synagogue, built 27 years ago, was sold to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints seven months ago because of a dwindling Jewish membership. It doubled as a synagogue on Saturdays and a Mormon church on Sundays until the end of the Jewish session, which runs from the Jewish new year in September until June.

The new Montreal Mormon chapel has 400 members and the Jewish congregation has merged with the nearest reform synagogue.

Pierre Tasse, a Mormon spokesman, said his group wouldn't alter the inside of the synagogue.

"After all, our religion stems from the Jewish tradition," he said. "We found that we had enough symbols and ideas in common not to feel alienated during the seven months we shared the premises."

"After all, Jesus Christ's public image was not that great either," he said.

WINNIPEG— Jehovah's Witnesses say the coolness that often greets them when they go knocking on doors is caused by their well-known stance against blood transfusions, said delegates at a regional conference.

Arnold MacNamara, a congregation administrator from Toronto, said the issue is becoming "less and less of a controversy, because doctors have begun to respect our views and seek alternatives."

"There are blood substitutes available that do no harm," he said. "In fact, a new synthetic blood, which is still in the experimental stages, as been used on three Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States."

Alvi Hanson, chairman of the regional convention that drew about 4,600 participants, said the witnesses aren't worried about their public image.

EAST GREEN HARBOUR, N.S. — The Pentecostal Church in this tiny southwestern Nova Scotia fishing community traces its beginnings to a fisherman named Sheldon Meyers who arrived in 1935 with a guitar and a portable organ to begin his ministry.

Meyers said he had "felt the call of God" on his heart, went there to preach and the response was encouraging. A year after he arrived, 27 people were baptized.

Meyers remained in the town for nearly seven years. A church was erected in 1939.

Allen Gibson, a church historian, said the congregation remains small, but it has produced a remarkable number of missionaries and ministers. About 12 names on the current pastoral listings are of people from East Green Harbour.

FATHER BEDE REYNOLDS would like to re-assure "all" that the Barque of Peter is not about to sink. So please, please my friends if you have jumped ship? Have not been quite measuring up? Let me assure you that we have only to do as the apostles did when the going got rough on the Sea of Gallilee.
Father Bede pleads to all his friends, to all who have abandoned ship, to look deep down within yourselves and re-examine the facts.

Clogged Cutlass problem may be caused by rust

by mike lamm

The fuel filter in my 1979 Olds Cutlass has clogged and been changed three times in 9,600 miles. After I change the filter, the car runs fine, but an orange dust begins to appear within 1,000 miles or so, and the filter eventually clogs again. The Olds dealer says I got a bad batch of gasoline, but the filling station where I trade claims they've never had a complaint. What do you suggest?

Many Filters

Dear Filters:

The orange color suggests rust. The best solution is to remove your gas tank and have it cleaned out thoroughly.

Dear Mike:

You've mentioned several times that drivers with high-compression engines should retard their ignition to compensate for lower octane gasoline. I intend to retard the timing on my 1969 Ford 390 V-8 because of pinging. Should I leave the point setting as is? How about carburetor adjustment, choke, sparkplug gap, etc.? Should any of these be changed to compensate for the slower timing?

Knocking

Dear Knocking:

No, you needn't do anything other than set back the timing.

Dear Mike:

At 100,000 miles, the rear end went out in my 1970 Barracuda. The shop put in a new thrust bearing on the pinion shaft. Now, whenever, I drive forward or back up, there's a loud clunking noise. It feels like the rear axle has a lot of slack in the gears. Can this be fixed?

Clunking

Dear Clunking:

Yes, and have it repaired soon because the play in your drivetrain is very hard on all gears and joints. I suspect all you need is an adjustment of the new bearing — something the mechanic should have done when he installed the bearing.

Dear Mike:

You recently published a letter from a Chevrolet owner who was confronted with a $65 estimate for changing one dashboard light bulb. This is an old problem. After going through similar expenses with a Buick and a Cadillac, I learned that it's wise to have all bulbs replaced whenever one goes out. They're all the same age and will soon fail, one after the other. Hope your readers might profit by my experience.

Another Who's Been There

Dear Been:

Yes, and a good tip it is. Many thanks.

Feel free to send your automotive questions to Michael Lamm, Box 7607-B Stockton, Calif. 95207.

Neck bones bet looks like loser

By Dr. Frank Miller

Dear Dr. Miller:

I bet somebody a giraffe has a big bunch of bones in its neck. Do I collect?

E. F.

Dear E. F.:

Probably not. A giraffe has the same number of bones in its neck that most other mammals do. The number is seven. It's simply that the cervical vertebrae in the giraffe's neck are considerably longer.

Dear Dr. Miller:

Our pony was bred but she was going to have a lot of problems. So our vet gave her some abortion shots. And they worked. Since all that happened, our dog came into heat. She got out one day and when she came back, she looked suspiciously happy.

I thought maybe just to be on the safe side I'd have the vet give her some of those abortion shots like our pony got, but he wouldn't do it. Why wouldn't they work on the dog, too?

A. R.

Dear A. R.:

Hormone injections causing abortion in horses could achieve the same results in dogs, though that wouldn't necessarily be "on the safe side." Your veterinarian may not want to use this approach because the drug may not be licensed for use in dogs or because of potential undesirable side effects or for some other reason.

your horoscope

BY SYDNEY OMARR

Sunday, July 27, 1980

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent on consolidation, basic priorities, a decision concerning special relationship. Friendship intensifies; older individual offers wise counsel. Unless you are to be inextricably involved, move on! The choice is your own.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Finish rather than begin project. Strike chord of universal appeal. Find ways to improve distribution and display of product. Career goal comes into sharp, clear focus. Aries, Libra natives play significant roles. You're due for special, civic recognition.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Strive for new start in new direction. Highlight originality, independence, willingness to take a "pioneer path." Accent on distance, travel, learning process and communication. You'll learn more about a publishing venture.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Follow through on hunch — intuition can serve as reliable guide. You're able now to delve beneath surface indications. Spotlight on investments, money affecting one close to you and an "occult" experience. Another Cancer and an Aquarian play key roles.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Display versatility, sense of humor and ability to communicate in dramatic, graphic manner. Win rather than force your way — opposition melts if you turn on charm. Emphasis on special legal document, public relations and marital status.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Review, revise, attend to details and be aware of small print. Check basic material. Improve services, keep resolutions concerning diet, nutrition and health. One who shares your interests makes major concession and your morale soars as result.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Get ideas in writing. Piece together bits of information and come up with complete story. Don't skip details, take nothing for granted. Elements of adventure and romance dominate your personal scenario. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take initiative, finish what you start. Circumstances favor your efforts. You can be at right place at right time. Judgment and intuition are on target. Know it, be confident and make personal appearances. A burden is due to be lifted — yes, celebrate!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): What had been a reason for fear and doubt will be transformed into a stepping-stone toward goal. Accent on institution, hospital, club, organization and a glimpse "behind the scenes." A prophetic dream should be properly intepreted.

IF JULY 27 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY ... you are a natural humanitarian, people are drawn to you with their problems. You react especially well under pressure and during emergency situations. Aries, Libra persons play important roles in your life. You will be "away from home" in August. Emphasis wll be on domestic adjustment and possible change of residence. October could be your most memorable month of 1980. During this year, you gain rare insights which enable you to learn truth about friends, desires and potential. You are basically peaceful, but will fight when you feel cause is right.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Cash flow is due to be resumed. See picture as a whole. You need not be painted into corner. Be versatile, flexible and open lines of communication. Gemini, Sagittarius natives play significant roles. You obtain "story behind the story."

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If seeking immediate results, you could be disappointed. Key is to be thorough and patient. What you want will eventually be handed you on proverbial silver platter. Gemini, another Virgo and a Sagittarian play feature roles. Change of scenery is due.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Affairs of heart dominate your personal scenario. Domestic situation improves and you'll beautify surroundings. Surprise gift is on agenda. Another Libra, a Taurus and a Scorpio figure prominently. You receive "good money news."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make new start in new direction. Personal magnetism is emphasized. Member of opposite sex compliments you on charm and attractiveness. Leo and another Aquarian figure prominently. Trust your own judgment. Accent independence and willingness to test "pet theories."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Treat confidences with respect. Be discreet. Know that being alone is not same as being lonely. Don't permit aggressive individual to interfere with your "private time." Look behind scenes for answer to perplexing problem. You are going to emerge victorious!

IF JULY 28 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can be life of party while feeling lonely. You are a complicated individual who can be generous, stubborn and controversial. You are independent, creative, original and members of opposite sex find you an "attractive challenge." Leo, Aquarius persons play important roles in your life. September could be your most significant month of 1980, a year of added responsibility, authority, intensified relationships and power. You have bounced back from period of adversity. Jersey and guernsey stitches have old and rich history

One book I have is a collection of very old and traditional stitches, in what we loosely term today as "aran knitting" or "fisherman knits."

Those of you from England know the word "jersey" has another meaning, other than a prize breed of cattle.

But did you know that years ago "guernsey" or "gansey" as they sometimes call them, is a special type of sweater? And that the Channel Islands, Jersey and Geurnsey, and the nearby French coastal area, were famous during the late fifteen hundreds for their intricate knitting patterns.

In fact, it was Sir Walter Raleigh when he was Governor of Jersey from 1600-1603, who brought about the establishment of an extensive trade between that island and Newfoundland.

The trading endured for some three hundred years and gave rise to local shipbuilding and the supply of woolen garments for the mariners.

In 1586 it is recorded Queen Elizabeth paid twenty shillings for a pair of silken-topped guernsey stockings, and that Mary Stuart went to her execution wearing a pair of white Guernsey hose.

Usually the guernseys were knitted with a thick dark blue wool, while the jerseys were of thinner wool and could be navy, grey, beige or the natural shade.

The book sums up by saying "The two garments are really identical in shape, but differ by reason of the Jersey knit (ourve in the patois), which is unlike any english, French or Guernsey type. But it would take an expert to tell the difference."

I have a pattern along the lines of these sweaters with a colored picture on the instructions sheet.

There are two designs, both pullovers, one V-neck, the other turtleneck. Instructions are for both men's and women's sizes and both designs are knit with a Shetland wool by Scheepjes. The number of this pattern is 77202 and can be obtained for 75 cents and a stamped return envelope, or $1 post free.

This week's pattern is a summer fun for the young set — little tops that can be either knit or crochet. Why not let them make their own? These little tops are useful when the cooler weather sets in as they can be worn over a T-shirt or even another sweater.

They are simple and quick to make and the one of granny-squares can be both gay and colorful. All three only require a small amount of yarn. Instructions are for size 12 to 16.

To order Leaflet No. 7213, send 75 cents plus a stamped self-addressed return envelope, long one if possible. If you do not have a stamp or envelope, please enclose an extra 25 cents to cover the cost of handling and print your name and address. Send to: May E. MacLean, Knit & Chat, 486 Montford Drive, Dollard des Ormeaux, Quebec, H9G 1M6.

Please be sure to state pattern numbers correctly when ordering and to enclose your stamped return envelope for faster service. My catalogue together with information on art needlework supplies can be obtained for 75 cents plus a stamped return envelope.

When the painter says he stands behind his work, ask him to explain further before you give the go-ahead to freshen up your home. In writing or before a witness, ask him what will he do if the paint starts to crack and peel within less than a year? Who is responsible for preparing the surfaces to be painted? Knowing the answers before the painter begins could save you frustration and repainting money later on.

You may have noticed that prices for punch, diluted fruit juices, ades, etc., are already up because of enormous increases in sugar prices in January and February. Well, watch for higher prices on some citrus drinks and other fruit drinks, frozen berries and seasonal foods processed earlier this year. It will be summer and fall sugar prices that affect the most foods . . . harvest time, you know.

Medics are studying fat, infertility tie

by l. l. coleman, md

I've been married for two years and have gained an enormous amount of weight. I attribute this to the good life, without any exercise. For the past year my husband and I have been trying to have a baby. I have not been able to conceive. The doctor cannot find any reason for our infertility. Is it possible that my added 50 lbs. could in any way be responsible?

G.D.

Dear G.D.:

There are now many exhaustive tests by which infertility in the woman and the man can be studied. There seems to be almost no limit to the new ones that are being developed to make conception possible.

It is interesting that you should ask if there could be a relationship between your overweight and your failure to conceive. A number of gynecologists and obstetricians are investigating the possible relationship between excess body fat and infertility. It seems that the excess weight may play a role in the changes of the regularity of ovulation, for the production of the monthly egg of the ovary.

It is believed that the excess body weight, with its accompanying body fat, may in some way alter the balance of the female hormone, estrogen. For fatty tissue, in a measure, is responsible for the production of the hormone.

In the absence of any other reason for your infertility, it might be worthwhile to embark on a rigid dieting program under the supervision of your doctor.

Dear Doctor:

I use the sauna and the steam room in my club, even in hot weather. Some people tell me it's a bad idea. Can this be harmful in any way?

C.L.Y.

Dear C.L.Y.:

Steam can be very soothing to the mucous membrane that lines the nose; the pharynx (back of the throat), the larynx, the trachea and the lining of the bronchial tubes.

People who have chronic coughs, irritation of the lining of the bronchial tubes and congestion of the sinuses often note that steam is very soothing.

But excessively hot steam should be avoided in any weather. The benefits of a sauna or steam bath can be dissipated by overexposure to hot steam for unreasonably long periods of time.

Some people deliberately test their ability to withstand hot steam and come out of the bath in a state of exhaustion.

Moderation is the key to this or any other form of diversion, exercise or recreation.

Confidential to 11-year-old M.:

Sorry I cannot write you directly. Let me assure you that your fears of having V.D. are unfounded. You must confide in your parents and see your doctor. He will relive your fears.

Write Dr. Coleman in care of The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4.

Sisters meet

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — After searching for her sister for 31 years, Regina Nolan, 36, was overjoyed to find her living in Windsor. Regina, a Polish native now living in Dublin, was separated from Julia after the Second World War, and found her after searching through telephone directories at the Canadian embassy in Dublin. She recently arrived in Canada for a month-long visit.

A smile is a smile but not the gesture

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A smile is a smile the whole world over, but be careful where you stick out your tongue.

Psychologist Paul Ekman says he has hard scientific proof that, regardless of country or culture, human faces use the same expressions to show the same basic emotions.

He said his and others' research on non-verbal communication shows that happiness, sadness, surprise, anger, fear and disgust produce the same expressions — smiles, frowns, wide eyes, clenched jaws and so on — in any culture.

These universal expressions seem to be programmed into our genes, he said.

But if expressions are the same from culture to culture, gestures emphatically are not.

These symbolic signs with hands or faces "are really like a language," Ekman, a professor at University of California said.

"They have a vocabulary that's different from place to place and the same movement can mean entirely different things."

He said the circled thumb and forefinger that means "A-OK" in the United States is "a real insult in Southern Europe — an unprintable insult."

And where an American youngster might stick out his tongue to show defiance, "in some cultures that's a sexual invitation."

While Americans have 60 or 70 common symbolic gestures, Ekman said, Israelis — the champion gesturers — use more than 200. Southern Italians are close behind.

Women better men by a nose

NEW YORK (UPI) — In relationships between the sexes, women rate the importance of smell higher than men, an olfactory specialist reported Tuesday.

Dr. Robert I. Henkin, director of the Center for Molecular Nutrition and Sensory Disorders at Georgetown University's Medical Center, said on a scale of 1 to 10 for importance, women rated smell 8.5. Men rated it 7.5.

He said 15 million Americans have an impaired sense of smell, 4 million have dysomia — distorted smell function — and 75,000 have congenital hyposmia — lack of smell.

In his "Survey on the Sense of Smell," Henkin questioned 822 persons in major cities in California, Texas, Indiana, tidewater Virginia, Philadelphia and the greater New York area.

The survey found that young people 17-20 considered smell in relationships with the opposite sex the most important. Next was the 41-60 age group, followed by people over 60. Last was the 21-40 group.

People living in Manhattan rated the sense of smell the highest — 9.9 out of a possible 10. Chicagoans were next with 9.3, residents of Long Island, N.Y., 9.2, and Connecticut, 8.6.

"People in New Jersey, Indiana and California noted less importance to these relationships," Henkin said.

Dear Abby:

I am the mother of two children, eight and 10, who are home all day now that summer vacation is here.

I don't want to sound like an old scrooge, but our neighbor, who lives alone, has his nine-year-old grandson staying with him all summer. The boy spends most of the day at our house playing with my two.

He helps himself to snacks, argues with my children and behaves like a typical nine-year-old.

I don't want to be rude or make him feel unwelcome, but six hours a day, every day, can be a little wearing.

Please tell me how to handle this situation without causing my children to lose a friend. There must be other mothers who feel as I do.

No Open House

Dear No:

The visiting child needs playmates, so please don't turn him away.

Do, however, let him know that when he's in your home he will have to abide by some rules — such as no helping himself to snacks. If he gets unruly, discipline him as you would your own. I realize that six hours a day, every day, can be wearing, but a nine-year-old who has been sent to his grandfather's all summer probably needs loving care and acceptance more than most children, so please be extra patient and understanding.

Dear Abby:

I was told that if a girl wants a husband, she should sleep with a piece of wedding cake under her pillow. Is there any truth to that?

Ready, Willing and Able

Dear Ready:

I can't guarantee you a husband, but you'll get plenty of ants.

Dear Abby:

Three years ago, my two sisters and I were bridesmaids at our brother's wedding. The bridesmaids' dresses, which were very beautiful and expensive, were paid for by the parents of the bride.

All of a sudden, three years later, we all got identical letters from our sister-in-law saying she wants the dresses back. She requested that we bring them to the next family gathering so she can pack them away with her wedding gown!

Of course we will do as she wishes, but we never have heard of this before, have you? Is this proper etiquette?

Three Sisters

Dear Sisters:

If the bride pays for the bridesmaids' gowns, it is customary to give them to her bridesmaids. Your sister-in-law may have decided to store the bridesmaids' dresses along with her wedding gown to be used by other family members — possibly her own daughter in years to come.

In any case, this is a first for me. And should other brides decide to adopt this policy, they should so advise their bridesmaids at the time of the wedding, because it's not unusual for bridesmaids to dye, shorten, remodel, or even give away their gowns after one wearing.

Dear Readers:

Because cancer is a major disease in North America, the National Cancer Institute now has an information hot-line to answer questions from the general public, cancer patients and their families, and even health professionals. There is much misinformation and many myths concerning cancer, so if you have any questions, for informed, up-to-date printed material on cancer, please call the Canadian Cancer Society in Victoria at 382-3442, or drop by at 857 Caledonia.

Abby loves to get your letters. Write directly to Dear Abby, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212. Be sure to enclose a self-addressed envelope with Canadian postage affixed if you wish a personal reply.

Plan ahead for good vegetable crops

hilda beastall

Surveying our vegetable garden at this stage of the game when so many things are at their peak of production and we are busy gathering in our crops of fresh produce, I get to thinking about how much our family's gardening techniques have changed since we first tried our hand at growing our own vegetables.

When we started out in this very addicting hobby of vegetable gardening so many years ago, we would begin pouring over the seed catalogues soon after Christmas, greedily circling almost every sort of vegetable listed, choosing a variety suited to our area and our tastes.

The trouble was that at that time we had a limited garden space like most people living in a metropolitan area and with young children to take up our time, we soon found that we could not manage to grow every single type of vegetable every year.

So what we did was to hit upon a rather practical plan to suit our space and needs. First of all, in planning the vegetable garden for the year, we would decide when we'd be away on holiday. Then we eliminated any crop that we knew would have to be picked during the period or else perish.

Next, with the remaining vegetables we would LIKE to plant, we listed them in the order of preference. For us, peas came at the top of the list, then corn, garlic, carrots, onions and potatoes. It seemed that we never had enough garden carrots for each summer's day would bring at least 10 youngsters into the yard begging for a carrot freshly pulled from the ground.

The next step was to draw a rough picture of the vegetable plot, marking in any perennial features such as rhubarb or asparagus. Then, starting at the top of our list of preferences, we planned for space for each crop.

With any bits of space we might have left, we would plan for small amounts of vegetable varieties that we like fresh but not frozen. Broccoli, for example, we love to eat out of the garden but find it not nearly so good as many other vegetables frozen.

With some vegetables, like corn, which is so delicous picked fresh and steamed on the cob, we would try to plant both an early and a late variety to extend the fresh eating season. Corn is a vegetable we never have enough of in the freezer, especially corn cut off the cob — a favorite with the youngsters.

A cool spring and early summer such as we have experienced this year serves as a reminder that it's good insurance to plant an early variety of corn just in case we don't get the heat necessary for success with the later varieties.

We have found, especially in hot summers, that corn has another important use in the garden. Early in the season I plant between the rows of corn such things as radish, spinach, lettuce and other early season crops that come out of the garden before anything else. These can be seeded at the same time or before the corn.

We've even discovered that short rows of lettuce, planted at the head of the spaces between the corn rows, will keep growing there during most of the season. It's an ideal answer for those without space or a good cool spot for lettuce. Up front, in between the corn, the lettuce still gets light without being wilted by the hot sun when we do get it.

There are even ways to plan for space for vegetables, if grown in the normal way, you would never have space for. If you have a wire fence on an open, sunny boundary of your property, for example, it can be used to grow cucumbers, melons or to vine winter squash on.

This is the first full season of gardening we've had on our new larger property and it's surprising how swiftly we're adapting after a decade making do with a city-sized lot. We've planted more varieties and more of each variety and, just as with the smaller garden, it seems every available square inch, or centimetre, is spoken for.

NEW YORK (AP) — Estimates released by the Association of American Publishers show book sales in 1979 totalling about $6.330 billion, an increase of 9.3 per cent over 1978 sales. Highest percentage increases were recorded by subscription reference books and college textbooks.

McDonald probe report to blast RCMP, politicians

OTTAWA (CP) — A royal commission report expected by early autumn will deliver a withering blast at senior RCMP administrators and the politicians they have reported to in recent years, sources close to the commission say.

They say the report will document the weaknesses of the system, the RCMP's lack of candor in informing the politicians and the lack of political interest in dealing with the evident problems of the security service.

The report will recommend new security structures based firmly in legislation and possibly modelled after a new Australian system which arose from a royal commission inquiry.

The initial report will not, however, identify those held responsible by Mr. Justice David McDonald, commission chairman, for illegal acts in recent years.

Although more than 50 Mounties and officials have been served notice that the commission intends to recommend that they be prosecuted or disciplined for such acts, this is just the beginning of a process that will lead to a second report — now not expected before 1981.

Under the Inquiries Act, the commission must offer a private hearing to any individual it intends to identify responsible for illegal or quasi-legal acts. At the hearing, the individual may try to convince the commission it should not identify him.

Speculation now focuses on the fate of the RCMP security service. If the Australian model is chosen, a civilian agency would be established to deal with counter-espionage, while a special police branch, possibly in the RCMP, would be set up to counter terrorists.

Murray meddler courting disaster

TORONTO (CP) — A bachelor wheat farmer from Saskatchewan, obsessed with singer Anne Murray, is in hot water with the courts again — this time for sending her a birthday card.

Robert Charles Kieling, 43, insisted in provincial court Friday that Miss Murray wants to carry on a relationship with him and produced a letter dated June 9 he said she wrote to him.

Kieling told Judge Thomas Mercer the letter, sent to him in jail, was written in code by Miss Murray so it would get by jail officials.

It said she was only using him for publicity and that he should return to Saskatchewan and settle down with a girl who deserves him.

Kieling said because the letter was in her handwriting, it was proof she wanted to continue the relationship, so he sent her a birthday card.

Kieling first appeared in court on April 30 when he entered into a peace bond for two years with the condition he not communicate with Miss Murray or her Toronto staff.

He was later fined $300 and put on two years probation for disobeying the court order.

"Try to get it into your head, if you can, Miss Murray doesn't want to see you again," Mercer said, then remanded Kieling in custody until Aug. 11.

After-death rip-off laid to Soviets

TORONTO (CP) — Attorney-General Roy McMurtry says he will try to tighten a loophole in Ontario law which allows the Soviet Union to annually skim millions of dollars from estates of Soviet emigrants who die in the province.

"We believe there are abuses and the procedures can be improved," he said Friday in a telephone interview.

When an Ontario citizen whose beneficiary lives in the Soviet Union dies, the Soviets can get power of attorney from the beneficiary.

A little-known section of the Ontario Judicature Act, which regulates the province's court system, enables them to insist on having an estate liquidated

But executors are unable to ensure the money will reach next-of-kin in the Soviet Union and beneficiaries inside that county are estimated to receive one-tenth of the money they are left in a Canadian will.

The Soviet agents insist the estates left by deceased emigrants, mainly Ukrainians, Lithuanians and Estonians, be turned into cash, which lawyers in Ontario say is at least $50,000 a will.

"CANADA
REVIEW CONFERENCE"

An Opportunity for Canadians to join in the work of their Government

Canadians have a deep interest in international security, human rights and co-operation among nations. European security is of particular concern, owing to Canada's many associations.

Canada will be participating in an international conference in Madrid this autumn to review the present situation and the state of security and co-operation in Europe.

The House of Commons has set up a Sub-committee on the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE); to prepare for the Madrid Conference. The Sub-committee's task is to hear the views of the Canadian public and submit its report to Parliament before the opening of the Madrid Conference.

Members of the Sub-committee believe that this will be a great opportunity for Canadians to join in the work of their government. It should interest a great many people, including those concerned about European security and disarmament, human rights in Eastern Europe, trade and scientific information, contacts with relatives in Eastern Europe, and cultural and information exchanges.

Members of the Sub-committee invite written briefs from all who are interested in the Madrid meeting. These briefs should focus on two main questions: what objectives should Canada pursue in Madrid in such fields as disarmament, human rights, economic relations and human contacts? How well has the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki CSCE conference been implemented so far?

Intention to send a written submission should be made known to the Clerk of the Sub-committee by Saturday, August 30, 1980 and submissions should be received not later than Monday, September 15, 1980. These submissions and all related correspondence and enquiries should be addressed to:

and Cooperation in

The Sub-committee will at its discretion be hearing submissions at public hearings at a later date rock

By ISAAC WILLIAMS

Have you ever wondered why some albums can be released immediately, played on every radio station in the land, put on sale in just about every record store, sell a few million copies and yet be a piece of junk? A good example of this is the latest waste of vinyl by the world's oldest rock and roll band. Have you ever tried to figure out why a real good album is ignored by radio stations and record stores and hence the public? We all have favorite albums that probably sold about ten copies world wide and every week a few more albums are added to the list of the great unheard. As long as record companies market product instead of distributing music and radio stations play "the hits" instead of a variety of records this situation will not change. If you want to add another great unknown album to your collection then read on, you may never hear about this record anywhere else.

The story began in 1973, somewhere in England, when Brian Eno teamed up with an unknown band of Canadians called The Winkies to do a few concerts. The critics went wild proclaiming The Winkies as the next big thing but fame left as quickly as it came. Eno left to do his own album and The Winkies disbanded leaving the band members with enhanced reputations but little else.

Philip Rambow was the singer and guitar player with the band and he remained unheard from until early 1978. Then the English music press heralded the Rambow-Ronson band as "the next big thing." Rambow had teamed up with Mick Ronson, David Bowie's old guitar player, and they played some electrifying club dates. Again success was a step too far away as Ronson left to go to work with Ian Hunter and Rambow went back to obscurity.

Before he disappeared Rambow managed to release an album called Shooting Gallery which the music press in England managed to overlook completely. After a year of being only available as an import the album has been released in Canada and is being totally ignored here as well. Don't ask me why the radio isn't playing Shooting Gallery — maybe the radio programmers have never heard of it because the record company is too busy marketing old Beatles songs to do any promotion of new artists.

Rambow is a singer-song writer-guitar player in the Springsteen, Parker, Costello mold and before you say "who needs another one of them" let me explain that he sings like Van Morrison, writes songs like Bruce Springsteen and plays guitar like Chris Spedding. If that is not enough to convince you, what if I tell you Shooting Gallery contains at least four songs that could become rock and roll classics? . . .

One of the classics, Rebel Kind, has to be the best James Dean inspired rebel song of all time. One of the ballads, Victim, acts as an epitaph for the late Sid Vicious and adds some humanity to the sensationalism that surrounded Sid's last days.

If you want an album that will send shivers up your spine, try to find Shooting Gallery. In a few years' time, when Rambow is famous and radio stations are playing his hits and record companies flogging his product, you can just sit back and laugh.

Japanese vignettes a change

Ivory geisha with flowing kimono in art gallery show opening Sunday

By AUDREY JOHNSON

To the Western mind, says a recent Art Gallery of Greater Victoria release, perhaps nothing is harder to penetrate than the complex Japanese way of life; especially the extraordinary multi-levelled arts that are so much a part of that life.

An exhibition opening Sunday, Introduction to Japanese Art, is a refreshing departure from the usual reverent display of Japanese 'masterpieces' singly or in settings divorced from utility.

Here the objects will be presented in vignettes or settings which illustrate their inter-relatedness, form and function:

A New Year's party in 18th century Tokyo revealing the taste and trappings of the wealthy urban merchant class of that time — a smoking kit in exquisite metalwork, sake pots, paperback books..

The dressing table of a woman of the period, showing off the gallery's collection of hair winders, combs, gorgeous silks and other items. A scholar's desk with a Zen painting, meditative atmosphere and tools for calligraphy.

Any such exhibition without a setting of the tea ceremony would be incomplete. This is the cornerstone of a life dedicated to the deep appreciation of the simpler things.

Other settings reveal folk art pieces such as a fireman's coat, fish baskets and a pilgrim's staff; inro (decorated interlocking containers for medicines and seals worn through the sash of the kimono) and netsuke (the carved toggle or fob attached by a cord to the inro).

This exhibition is accompanied by a comprehensive catalogue and will tour Canada. Originated by the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, it is drawn from the extensive Asian collections, especially the Fred and Isabel Pollard Collection. It will remain here through Sept. 14.

Meanwhile, the splendid showing of early works by Jack Shadbolt, so rich in content and masterly in execution continues to be a fascinating area of the gallery until Aug. 31.

There is sad news this week for the hundreds of people who have appreciated the dandy little publication coming out of the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria for the last few years — Arts Victoria.

Volume VI, No.2, just off the press, is the end. There will not be a No.3. Funding has ceased.

The publication, attractively laid out, lavishly illustrated with good quality photographs, full of interesting and informative material has been edited for almost five years by Robert Amos, assistant to the director, who is himself leaving the gallery and the city.

Amos tells us, in announcing the end of Arts Victoria "in its present form" that as the principal circulation of the publication is to the membership, the National Museums Corporation (which has paid for it so far under its mandate to educate all Canadians) is no longer able to support what it views as a private gallery's newsletter.

But the disappearance of Arts Victoria is only the tip of the iceberg as far as the Gallery's funding problems are concerned.

Amos concludes his report by saying that many hard decisions must be faced. "If we don't get more local support we will face changes to the Gallery more serious than the end of Arts Victoria," he concludes.

It is not possible to estimate the Gallery's value to this city in terms of dollars. Its potential for enriching the lives of the citizens, for spreading before them the cultures of other lands and centuries as well as our own, for expanding the minds and challenging the imagination of the young, is beyond price.

And in spite of being constantly pinched financially there is an admirable fiscal responsibility in its management.

Not only that; it is a happy place to visit. Rather like a garden with a muted but dedicated activity threading its generally serene ambience. A good part of which is due to the bands of volunteers who contribute many hours to numerous activities including the operation of its pleasant cafe and the delightful gift shop.

Dual option for young thespians

Twenty-six students from secondary schools in communities throughout the province have gathered at UVic for the eighth season of Senior Secondary Summer Theatre Workshop.

A six-week program of intensive training in acting, movement, voice and stage craft coached by members of UVic theatre department will culminate in presentation of a full length production in the Phoenix Theatre.

Canadian poet and playwright James Reaney's Listen to the Wind has been selected by workshop director Jim Hoffman for this summer's vehicle.

The "play-within-a-play" will be seen at the Phoenix from Aug. 8 through Aug. 14, at 8 p.m. nightly except Sunday. The Phoenix box office opens Aug. 4 when reservations may be made by calling 477-4821.

Meanwhile, Kaleidoscope Theatre's successful summer theatre school operation in July is being followed up with registration for Theatrescope '80 classes for juniors (nine to 11 years) and intermediates (12 to 14 years).

The courses run from Aug. 4 to Aug. 22 at The Belfry Theatre, 1291 Gladstone. Further information can be obtained by caling either 383-8124 or 383-1232.

On Aug. 9 and 10 at the Belfry, Hans Christian Anderson's The Little Mermaid will be performed by students between the ages of 10 and 14.

The play will be directed by Lina de Guevara with assistance from Kaleidoscope Theatre instructors.

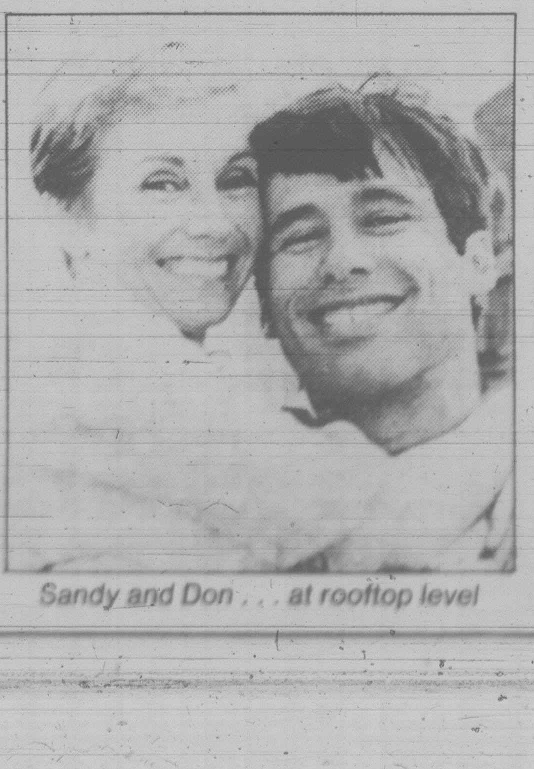
Paul Newman's auto crashed at Golden State Raceway while he was practising for Sunday's national championship road races, but he suffered no major injuries.

Rona Barrett, the Hollywood gossip columnist who has been a staple on the ABC-TV's Good Morning, America show since its premiere almost five years ago, is being dropped from the program and will be joining NBC-TV. Barrett will become a regular contributor to the Today program and the "West Coast anchor" of a new expanded Tomorrow show with Tom Snyder this fall.

As the diminutive major domo of the hostelry on television's Fantasy Island, Herve Villechaize has a lecherous eye for beautiful women. Now he's found his ideal woman on the set of the TV show, and they plan to marry Sept. 5. The French-born midget actor will marry Camille Hagen, a 23-year-old actress he met four years ago when she appeared on Fantasy Island as a beauty contest winner. She returned later in the the role of a female football player. "I'm numb," Villechaize said of his approaching marriage.



Sandy and Don . . . at rooftop level

Meanwhile, Sandy Duncan, flying star of the current revival of Peter Pan on Broadway, married Don Correia, a dancer on the show. The wedding was private and followed by a reception on her East Side penthouse patio.

Actor and sex symbol Burt Reynolds recalls when a Universal Pictures executive dismissed him and actor Clint Eastwood on the same day in 1959. "He looked at Clint and said 'You have a chip on your tooth. We could get that fixed, of course, but your Adam's apple sticks out too far. And you talk too slow.' Then he told me, 'You just don't have any talent.' " Reynolds says Eastwood still has that chipped tooth, "but he's done rather well." And Reynolds hasn't done too badly himself. Both are among the highest-paid actors in the world.

Catherine Bach, the feminine star of CBS's slam-bang hayseed hit The Dukes of Hazzard, says she is excited about the show's upcoming third season, but really is looking forward to its fifth year. "I don't know how the writers do it," she says. "They've come up with good comedies that are very clever. I'm pleased and relieved that it's not going to get boring this year." She says when the show reaches its fifth year, executive producer Paul Picard has promised to take her to dinner "anywhere in the world."

Theatre at core of Ankoku Buto

A visitor to Victoria's Open Space Gallery can expect to discover some art form that is 'different', even rare. In an over-exposed world of entertainment where so many things seem to be endlessly repeated, Open Space often provides an experience that is refreshing and a challenge to the imagination.

Next Friday and Saturday Open Space hosts one of these experiences — a unique ensemble entitled Ankoku Buto.

The name means 'Dance of Darkness'. In it the dancers create a kind of movement in a style that blends modern dance with Noh, Kabuki and Bunraku Japanese theatre traditions.

Japanese dancer Koichi Tamano first brought his small troupe to Vancouver's Western Front last fall. He was unknown then but not for long. Curiosity aroused by a dramatically striking poster, a large crowd filled the hall on that wet November night.

And Tamano captivated his unprepared audience with a genuine off-the-beaten track performance in the form of a series of fantastic movement tableaux.

To the audience it presented a stirring perception of the human animal and many people reserved tickets for the following night's performance on their way out.

The artists have created a powerful physical language in which surreal personages seem to float and change their shape and stature. It is a dance form which is very close to visual art and also to poetry. The originator of the style was Tatsumi Hijikata. Koichi Tamano studied with Hijikata and performed under his direction through the 1970s.

Said Vancouver reviewer Lawrence Panych, "Tamano's characters shrink and stretch, they contract and expand. At one moment they are flat floating two-dimensional shapes and then in a puff of air, they fill into finely sculpted forms in an endless cycle of deformation."

The Ankoku Dance Theatre opened its summer tour of western Canada at the White Rock Playhouse and Robson Square Theatre to sell-out audiences.

Its Open Space performances will take place at 8 p.m. at the gallery, 510 Fort. Tickets are reasonably priced at $3.50 general admission, $3 for members, students and senior citizens.

One of the more unusual female voices, a mezzo contralto, is to be heard in recital Thursday at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria. It belongs to Helga Tucker, a former Victorian who is the daughter of Arne Bo, former violist in the Victoria Symphony and at one time manager of the orchestra. He was also the first administrator of the Conservatory of Music where Helga began her voice study under Marilyn Wuis.

At the present time she is studying in Toronto.

The assisting artist is Kelly Charlton, a pianist and graduate student of the Conservatory, who will be making one of his last appearances in the city before leaving for England. He plans to continue his musical studies overseas, with particular emphasis on accompaniment.

Together the artists will present a program of songs by Henry Purcell, Schumann's Mary Stuart Songs, Benjamin Britten's A Charm of Lullabies, and the poignant Lullaby from Menotti's The Consul.

The concert takes place at 8 p.m.

Victoria's Deane-Solose-Skaggs Trio is breaking up with the departure from the city of pianist Kathleen Solose. The trio became well known and greatly appreciated during last winter when they presented a series of Friday noon hour concerts at McPherson Playhouse, performing most of the string sonatas and trios of Beethoven.

A last opportunity to hear this ensemble comes next Friday when Derry Deane, Solose and Lawrence Skaggs appearin a noon concert featuring works of Schubert and Mozart.

The free concert starts at 12 precisely.

As part of the Open Space reading series, on Thursday the gallery will present Rikki, Canadian writer, artist and illustrator. Her books of poetry include From the Star Chamber, Wild Geraniums and Weird Sisters, among others. Her prose has been anthologized in several publications. Her latest book of fiction is The Butcher's Tale.

She has illustrated The Blue Bird and Beauty and the Beast for the publishers, Knopf of New York. Her drawings and prints have been included in group shows in many countries and her book, Shazira Shazam and the Devil (Prentice Hall) was a junior Literary Guild selection.

While Rikki (Erica Ducornet) makes her home in France, she divides her time between Canada, the United States and France.

The reading from her works is sponsored by Open Space and Canada Council and is free to the public.

Play needs an overhaul

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Don Harron, the writer of The Wonder of it All, saw his CBC TV musical presented live on stage for the first time this week.

In Victoria briefly with wife, Catherine McKinnon, he visited the Four Seasons Musical Theatre production at Newcombe Auditorium, Tuesday.

He says that it took 10 years to transpose Anne (of Green Gables) from his original television musical and bring her to the Charlottetown Festival stage.

Emily Carr has taken eight years to travel the distance from television (The Wonder of it All was aired on CBC in 1972) to the stage version.

But Harron is far from satisfied with the result.

He was delighted with the commitment of the community to the production and the zeal of the cast in performing it.

He's enthusiastic about William Heslup's set which he calls "a fantastic piece of designing."

But he says frankly, the live stage version leaves much to be desired.

"There is a tremendous amount of work to be done by me on it... tremendous! I had too little time — 10 days from the moment I knew it was to be done here.

"As it stands it certainly could not become an annual event such as Anne is at Charlottetown."

Harron has just signed a contract with Charlottetown to produce Anne each season until 1995. "I am going to try to get back to Victoria to work on Wonder of it All," he says.

When? He's not sure — only that it has to be done if the work is to endure. He also says that he would like to see Wonder's composer, Norman Campbell, involved in a future staging of the show.

Told that many people have wondered why he took his script only as far as the beginning of Emily's acceptance with the mutual discovery between the Victoria artist and the Group of Seven, Harron replies: "because that was the climactic moment in her story."

He sees her long struggle against neglect, poverty, misunderstanding, as the high drama in her life. What followed, while an improvement for the artist, is theatrically an anti-climax.

"There's not much drama when things smooth out and become uneventful."

Don Harron almost qualifies for the title of 'Mr. Theatre' in Canada.

Canadian-born, actor-writer-director and host of CBC's Morningside, noted for his Canadiana creation of 'Charlie Farquharson', Harron began as a child actor at the age of 11 with the first of a series of 'firsts'. He participated in the first season with the Canadian Radio Commission (the origin of CBC); later he was involved with the first CBC television broadcast in 1953 and the first Stratford Festival season in '52.

Although a confirmed Torontonian, his scripts include the western musicals Wonder, Turvey, based on a book by Earl Birney and Sara Binks of Saskatchewan fame. He is now writing Harronside — an autobiography.

Fate changes lineup for festival

As harpsichordist Harmon Lewis does not arrive in Victoria until Monday, and Jacques Rouvier of the Trio Rouvier-Kantorow-Muller remains ill in France, there are changes and additions to the Victoria Internationsl Festival third week schedule.

At Sunday's concert at McPherson Playhouse, in place of the Bach Partita No.4, which was to have been played by Lewis, the Prokofiev Sonata in C Major for Gello and Piano will be performed by Stefan Reuss and Mitchell Andrews.

In addition to Schumann and Milhaud works scheduled for Sunday, violist Eberhard Klemmstein with Mitchell Andrews will perform Elegy for Viola and Piano by Glazounov. Concluding work is the Cesar Franck Piano Quintet for which the artists are violinists Yuri Mazurkevich and Dana Pomerantz-Mazurkevich, Klemmstein, Andrews and cellist Barry Gold.

The Beethoven Triple Concerto which was to have been performed on the Monday concerto program by the Trio Rouvier, is replaced by the Brahms Double Concerto for Violin and Cello to be played by Jean-Jacques Kantorow and Philippe Muller with the Victoria Symphony Summer Festival Orchestra. Also on the program is the Bach Brandenberg Concerto No.5 with soloists Yuri Mazurkevich, flautist Robert Aitken, and Harmon Lewis at the harpsichord.

John Ogdon joins Kantorow and Muller at Tuesday's chamber music concert, to perform the Beethoven 'Archduke' Trio. The Pacific Wind Quintet, back from Europe where they won the Prix de Ville in a chamber ensemble competition, comprise the balance of the program. They will play works by Taffanel and Malcolm Arnold's Three Sea Chanties for Wind Quintet.

There is a Canadian contemporary music program on Wednesday at St. Michael's University School, and on Thursday at University Centre Auditorium, another concerto program.

Town criers to compete Sept. 20

HALIFAX (CP) — Cries of "Hear ye, Hear ye", will again be heard along the Halifax waterfront this fall when contestants take part in the third consecutive International Town Crier Championships Sept. 20.

This year efforts are being made to attract criers from France, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, Austria and Hong Kong.

Last year's winner of the best crier and best-dressed criers' competition was Richard Fox of Lyme-Regis, Dorset, England. That town has had a crier since 1080.

Music series shown again

The eight-part Music of Man series hosted by violinist Yehudi Menuhin on television, will be repeated in Victoria thanks to the co-operative efforts of the National Film Board and the B.C. provincial government.

Two of the one-hour films will be shown on each of four Sundays in August, from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. in the Newcombe Auditorium. Admission is free.

A superb series about those who create, perform and listen to music, the showings start Aug. 3.

Remaining dates for the series are Aug. 10, 17 and 24.

DENIM BARBECUE SET
Chef's apron, hat and mitts
(5 sets to be won)

HOW TO PLAY

Locked inside the "SUMMERFUNTHING" safe are many valuable prizes. Some of those prizes could be yours if you find the correct PASSWORD that opens the combination lock. It's an exciting game that's fun and easy to enter. The instructions on the dial give you the position of the letters in the "SUMMERFUNTHING" PASSWORD. All you have to do is find the first letter to start. For instance, suppose you started at the letter E and the instructions read 2nd LETTER-FOUR COUNTER CLOCKWISE. Count four spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter E and you arrive at the letter A. The next instruction reads 3rd LETTER-EIGHT COUNTER CLOCKWISE, so count off eight spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter A and you arrive at the letter S. Finally the 4th letter. SIX CLOCKWISE means you count in a clockwise direction from the letter S and you arrive at the letter Y. In this example the PASSWORD is the word E-A-S-Y. To give you another clue and to add to the interest, each day's password is scrambled and you will find it at the bottom of the illustration.

GAME RULES

1. Winners will be chosen by random drawing from all valid entries. All winners must answer a skill testing question.
2. Winners from the previous week will be published in the Saturday Times and Sunday Colonist.
3. It is not necessary for contestants to buy the Colonist or Times to enter the SUMMERFUNTHING contest. An exact drawing of the entry form printed in the Colonist or Times may be made on a plain piece of paper. Note: copies produced by any other process will not be accepted.
4. The SUMMERFUNTHING judges will have the final decision on any interpretation of Game rules.
5. As a condition of receiving prizes, recipients agree to allow publication of their names and pictures in the Colonist or Times for no additional consideration. Submission of an entry indicates acceptance of all rules. No prize substitutions.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Daily Colonist and Victoria Times on Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands. Employees of Victoria Press and their immediate families are not eligible to enter.
7. In fairness to all, the Colonist or Times cannot answer questions or respond to phone calls or letters regarding THE SUMMERFUNTHING CONTEST.
8. All winners will be determined by a random draw from all valid entries.

HOW TO ENTER

Complete the puzzle and fill in the "PASSWORD" on the entry form. Clip out the entry form and send it to us in an envelope with the puzzle number printed in the top left hand corner of the envelope. (As illustrated.)

Be sure to include your name, address and phone number on the entry form.

Enter as many times as you wish but make sure each entry is in a separate envelope.

Laughter drowned out lines at Shut Your Eyes opening

By AUDREY JOHNSON

The kind of comedy that brings London audiences pouring into a West End theatre for months on end is almost always sexy, often a mite vulgar. A spicy pudding thoroughly stuffed with innuendoes, double entendres and brazen one-liners.

They're outrageously funny and if they lack nutrition they are a refreshment and one that is especially suitable to a summer evening.

Shut Your Eyes and Think of England is like that. It has packed them in in London through a substantial run. It is sexy; it's not vulgar, but it has all the rest of the traditional ingredients.

The McPherson Summer Theatre Company introduced it Friday to a full house with considerable success. Director Allan M. Purdy proffered a well-paced, up-beat show that was as attractive to the eye as it was entertaining. He achieved well-punctuated comedy and a good sense of movement flow on the clean, uncluttered professional looking set.

Shut Your Eyes pokes irreverent fun at almost everything — bureacracy, legal niceties, the "gay" world, cupidity, the Arab take-over of British business and real estate.

Such plot as exists has to do with a deal being worked out between Sheik Marami (Jack Droy) and a consortium headed by Sir Justin Holbrook (John Pugh).

Complications arising out of the presence of a high- class call girl (Mary Bissenden), the temporary derangement of Sir Justin — necessitating the assumption of his identity by his accountant (Colin Skinner) — and the appearance of a couple of wives, result in the usual mad mix-ups and near misses.

Skinner reaps most of the guffaws with his limp-wristed, mincing performance as the conservative underling coerced by the bribe of a title into playing a gay role. His feeling for farcical situations and impeccable sense of comedy timing is, as usual, a high point of the production.

Janet Senior pulls out all stops with a zany character that is a big plus in the production, but Jack Droy was having a bit of an off night. A generally reliable comedy actor, he fluffed a few lines and failed at times to reap legitimate laughs.

Purdy has formed his group of actors into a well-integrated team — an ensemble that is mutually supportive while being individually effective. Svelte Mary Bissenden (who rates wolf-whistles if ever a girl did), Carolyn Stephenson, John Pugh, John Britt, John Lattimer and Roger Carr all make satisfactory contributions to the overall success of this happily ridiculous comedy.

There was so much laughter that at times snatches of dialogue were lost; but that is hardly a serious criticism.

If a good laugh is what you're looking for, the McPherson is the place to find it Wednesday through Saturday until the end of August. Try not to miss it.

Fall TV fare looks bleak

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — The six-day-old actors strike could deprive television viewers of new fall programs and create a scarcity of new films for moviegoers next year if the contract dispute is not resolved soon, a negotiator for producers says.

"The new shows normally produced will not be available if the strike continues," Billy Hunt, the chief negotiator for the Association of Motion Picture and Television Producers, said Friday.

Hunt said the strike by the Screen Actors Guild and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists could substantially affect network programming in he fall and possibly keep new movies from theaters six or eight months from now.

"The studios have totally shut down production. There is no filming. If the strike goes another couple of weeks there will be very severe layoffs throughout the industry. If the studios close completely, between 40,000 and 50,000 people will be affected," Hunt said.

He said the strike has eliminated $40 million a week in expenditures normally going out for TV and major film production. He added that about $1.5 billion is spent on entertainment shows each year in Hollywood.

While stars of the status of Burt Reynolds earn $5 million a picture, and Carroll O'Connor, who earns a $1 million a year for Archie Bunker's Place, were idled by the strike, so were 47,000 other members of SAG, all but 10,000 or 15,000 of whom are chronically unemployed.

Beer cafes and brass bands in Strasbourg show Prussian influence in Alsace

Alsace a borderline case of cultural schizophrenia!

By MARCUS ELIASON

STRASBOURG, France (AP) — Sixty years ago a French politician proposed in all seriousness that the skulls of Alsatians be measured to determine once and for all whether they were German or French.

There has never been a shortage of weird ideas for curing the schizophrenia that Alsatians suffer from living between Germany and France. Small wonder that their bookstores are crammed with such titles as Alsace — A Psychoanalysis, or Alsace — The Identity Crisis.

This 200-by-40-kilometre strip of land on the west bank of the Rhine is where the Germanic and Latin meet in a swirl of conflicting currents.

Ever since Julius Caesar defended Gaul from Germanic invaders on Alsace's fertile plains and wooded mountains, the province has been a Franco-German battlefront.

Alsace has changed hands between Germany and France five times in 109 years (it's French right now), and each time it has been forced through a personality transplant. If it wasn't Robespierre's revolutionaries ordering the Alsatians to "quit their German ways" and act French, then it was Adolf Hitler's Gestapo arresting Alsatians for behaving like Frenchmen.

Alsace fascinates Germans and French alike. It is a magical land of foie gras, asparagus and grade-A sauerkraut, home of the famed annual schnackelballer, or snail race, and of champions in pulling-ugly-faces contests.

Here French is sung, rather than spoken, often with merry disregard for grammatical rules. And the local German dialect, far from dying out, is enjoying a revival.

In the village of Breitenbach, high in Alsace's Vosges Mountains, the guardians of the dialect have been fighting an attempt to put up French street names.

When the mayor replaced such sterling reminders of Alsace's past as Kriegersmatt (Warriors' Field) and Baehrenloch (Bears Pit) with banalities like Church Street and Fountain Road, a Committee for the Defence of Breitenbach promptly formed.

In clandestine leaflets, it proposed that the mayor Frenchify his name, Dillenseger, to its French equivalent, which means Plank Chopper. "Alsatians want to stay as they are," said the leaflet.

When Dillenseger refused to surrender, the shiny new street names were effaced with tar.

Alsace became French in 1648 after 805 years of German rule. Bismarck seized Alsace and neighboring Lorraine from Napoleon III in 1871, annexed the provinces to the Second Reich and Germanized them.

France regained them in 1918, and tried to re-Frenchify them. Then in 1940 the Germans returned, incorporated Alsace and Lorraine into the Third Reich, and went on the most brutal Germanization rampage the provinces have ever known.

They tore down French statues and raided houses looking for old French postcards and models of the Eiffel Tower.

French names were ordered Germanized. Claude became Klaus, Dupont became Bruckner. French-labelled salt shakers were confiscated, French inscriptions were chiselled off tombstones.

More than 130,000 Alsatians were drafted into the Wehrmacht and 40,000 died on the Russian front. The Nazis also built Struthof concentration camp in the heart of Alsace.

Consequently, the Alsatians were delighted to return to French rule in 1945. And the local separatist movement, which had welcomed the Nazis, believing Hitler's promises of autonomy, suffered a crippling blow.

"Even today, the autonomy movement is ineffective because it is still stigmatized by its past links with the Nazis," observes Siffer, an Alsatian intellectual and singer.

Still, Alsatians remain almost obsessed by the question of their identity. While regional dialects are dying out in much of Europe, the Alsatian tongue still is spoken by 70 per cent of the people and a course on the Alsatian language at Strasbourg University is a sellout.

German-language study in high school has been augmented and television and radio broadcasts from West Germany are generally preferred to French networks.

The old fear and hatred of Germany has been replaced by a snooty disdain for those big-spending Schwobs (Germans) who invade Strasbourg's supermarkets and restaurants and debase French haute cuisine by ordering sauerkraut with their Beaujolais.

One in 20 Alsatians crosses the border daily to work in Germany, where the average wage is as high as 50 per cent above French levels, and 76 German factories operate in Alsace.

Adding to the flow of deutschsmarks, thousands of Alsace and Lorraine residents who were forced to join the Wehrmacht will soon begin receiving military pensions from Bonn.

Helped by these ties to the German economy, Alsace is weathering Europe's economic crisis more successfully than the rest of France. Its exports are growing faster than those of any other French region and its unemployment rate is four per cent, compared with a national level of 6.7 per cent.

But Alsatian intellectuals like Siffer wonder where this prosperity is leading. In Alsace for Sale, the bespectacled 32-year-old Siffer sings:

"I work down in Schwobeland (Germany),
"Migrant worker, that's no shame.
"Schwob or Franzos — don't know what I am."

In search of Harris Tweed

By
EDMUND ANTROBUS

The king of cloth doesn't grow on pegs in expensive stores as some might suppose. Harris Tweed cascades off native looms in Scotland's Outer Hebrides, islands as romantic as the cloth itself.

Things bought at the source make the best souvenirs, and to buy tweed in Scotland forms a bond with that land which lasts for ever. This most famous of fabrics is indestructible. It will never wear out. Smell it months later. It holds its fragrance. What is that aroma? The smell of moorland peat against which it was dried? And that speck of something entrapped in the weave? Could it be heather?

The search for Harris Tweed winds across moors into which narrow, green, crooked fingers of the sea poke. The low-lying land is made luminous by a lowering sun. It is peat land, skimmed in part like the body of a whale. The bare, brown expanse is filigreed with emerald pools; fresh water, all shapes and sizes.

The sky is changing: deep blue to steel gray and just as rapidly to rose pink. These colours, one discovers later, are worked into the cloth, cloth you can buy to take home, as one would a photgraph.

The Vikings discovered Scotland's Outer Hebrides around 800 A.D. The Clo Mor, "the big cloth", was woven even then.

Centuries passed. The Campbells, the MacLeods, the MacDonalds, et al, continued to weave the noble cloth in their stark, small homes. Their own managers and foremen, operating their own looms in their own homes, they now produce seven million yards per year: a luxury product sold throughout the world, earning a total of $12 million — a remarkable achievement for a cottage industry.

It is also an example of people helping themselves. It has always been difficult to scratch a living in these bleak, unyielding, windswept isles. In the 1840's, when famine threatened, a mainland market was found for the tweed, which until then had only been made for the islanders' own use.

An infant industry was born. In the '20's, a benefactor equipped the crofters with Hattersley looms. Today, the tweed, exported to some 30 countries, comes off these same treadle-operated machines.

There are 600 weavers. Their crofts are widely scattered. From the air you can spot them: lonely places connected by roads, skirting lochs and hillocks. One can't see the bundles of woven tweed put on the roadside among the milk cans, but they are there, awaiting collection by vans from the mills which do the sorting and cleaning of the wool, the spinning, the dyeing and finishing of the hand-woven cloth . . . processes once done on the spot . . . but now by machines.

The Hebrides lie 50 miles off Scotland's coast. One reaches them by chess board progression: leapfrogging from one isle to another, using car ferries. Mallaig, a day's run from Glasgow, is a good place to start. You take the car ferry to Skye, then drive up the island to Uig for a ferry to Tarbert in Harris. If you want to see Stornoway, the hub of the whole island group, it's directly north in the Lewis section of the main island, which, curiously, is two-named: Lewis and Harris. Gaelic, the old Celtic language, is spoken alongside English in Stornoway. Flocks of sheep bar the motorist's way.

These Outliers, as they are collectively called, look on the map like a kite swept out to sea. Its tail is composed of long, skinny isles, linked by causeways, bridges and car ferries. The principal ones, aside from the main one (Lewis and Harris), are: North Uist, South Uist, Benbecula and Barra.

Starting from Tarbert, you can drive South, for the MacDonald croft, whose owners sell retail. They do not weave exclusively for the Stornoway mills. The MacDonalds, and weavers like them, sell through the mail to anyone with enterprise to seek them out.

A sign outside the MacDonald house says, "Harris Tweed for Sale", with no more flourish than one down the road which says "Fresh Eggs."

You will be invited in to a clean and comfortable parlour with bolts of tweed stacked on the table.

From the doorway, Mr. MacDonald can usually be observed operating one of the looms introduced in the '20's, his feet and hands moving so fast they can hardly be seen.

This foot-operated loom seems outmoded, but if a motor were attached, the cloth would no longer be Harris Tweed. It is just this lack of motor power . . . that, and the tweed being made in the islands, that entitles it to its precious name and trademark. Absurd it seems, but there's a reason for it.

In the 1930's, manufacturers tried to steal the name, putting a machine-made product on the market called "Harris Tweed."

The weavers and millowners went to court, offering their attested interpretation of Harris Tweed . . . a product wholly made in the Outer Hebrides from 100 per cent pure Scottish wool . . . not wool dyed, carded and finished on the mainland, woven in factory-like conditions.

The courts upheld this contention. Later, to re-inforce this insistence it was ruled that weaving must be done on looms driven by nothing more mechanized than the weaver's feet.

The treadle loom was a ball and chain, but also a guarantee of survival. No outsider could crash the business . . . unless he converted to a cottage industry . . . an unlikely move.

Mrs. MacDonald is responsible for the product's range of design and colour. She does the "warping": the complicated hand-process of arranging the warp threads (that run the length of the cloth), to form the desired patterns.

And where does she get her ideas? "From nature", she replies.

Her tweeds are inspired by the colors of moor and mountain, and are named for these landmarks. She has a cloth called "Valley Strand". It is pale yellow. The Valley Strand is the beach not far from her place. Then there is ferngreen called "Rona", the name of a foothill which you can see from her window.

Once the wool was dyed with lichens which grow on rock. (Bog myrtle made a deep yellow, Crotal, a rusty orange).

There are weavers who still use the natural dyes, but they are hard to track down. This custom, like one called "Waulking", is probably now folklore. Waulking was a process now called "finishing." The cloth was thickened with soap and lye and then pummeled on a trestled table to the accompaniment of song.

Halifax hosting navy reunion

By EVELYN OLDHAM

HALIFAX — Early in the summer of 1945 when for security reasons this city was known only as an eastern Canadian port, Canadian Navy personnel felt as welcome in Halifax as foxes in a hen house.

Then Haligonians blamed the Navy for riots that followed VE-Day celebrations and many citizens let those in navy blue know they were fed up with service people.

Thirty-five years have sailed by and it is the 70th anniversary of the Royal Canadian Navy. A new generation is running things in the city and what better way to mark the occasion than to welcome back former sailors, merchant seamen, Wrens and officers?

Nostalgic returnees won't recognize the city. High office towers and new hotels instead of church spires rise above the downtown. Buses replace the shaky street cars and underpasses and overpasses swoop here and there to carry the increased traffic and connect with the two post-war bridges linking Halifax and Dartmouth. Instead of the old, bulky ferry, a sleek vessel carries people to work and gives them a relaxing place to enjoy the water and lunch on a sunny day.

Some of the war-time Barrington Street haunts are gone — like the popular movie house and a favorite book store and the Green Lantern restaurant, a rendezvous spot. But the city abounds with new restaurants, bars and cocktail lounges.

The biggest change is along the waterfront. Once dingy and drab, it now sparkles, not with glassy towers but with its old warehouses, stores and offices cleaned, painted and restored to their original Victorian glory.

The rejuvenation is most obvious in a section called Historic Properties, between the waterfront and Grenville Street, north of Duke. Some buildings are four stories of painted board, local granite, or ironstone and their restoration reveals their Palladian, Romanesque or Gothic details.

Trees, grass, walkways and benches provide relaxing spots to watch the ships, including the famous Bluenose, the tugs and gulls, or to marvel once again at the wonderful natural harbor. It's big — the largest in the world after Sydney, Australia. Nelson, himself, couldn't have designed a more strategic one — an entrance protected by islands and a narrows that opens into a basin large enough to hold the whole wartime Canadian fleet.

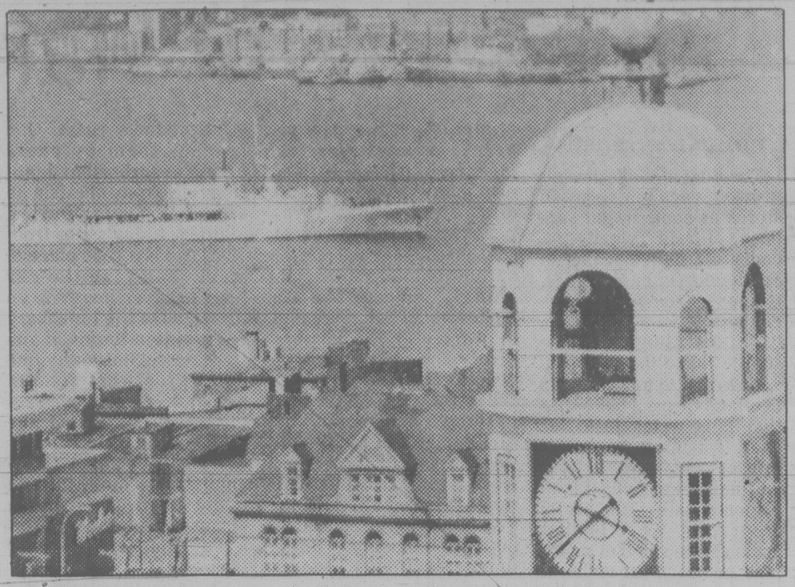
These days anyone can go into the dockyard, founded by Captain James Cook in 1757, and the oldest on the continent. Much of the dockyard looks as it did during the war except that some of the old jetties are gone. Those that are left aren't lined with corvettes, destroyers, frigates, minesweepers and aircraft carriers as they once were, but instead the harbor is busy with research vessels, tugs, ships in drydock and one of the largest container ports on the Atlantic.

Some old friends in port however are the Skeena, the Algonquin, the Saguenay and the Fraser — not all navy vessels have been sold for scrap or sunk for waterbreaks.

The new towers don't block views of old landmarks like St. Mary's Basilica with its high spires or the Tower on the Dingle or the old town clock atop Citadel Hill. And the gun still booms at noon as loud as ever from the Hill.

Halifax seems to have more clapboard houses than ever with their cupolas, bay windows, gingerbread, shutters, gables, balconies and domed turrets. These days they form rainbow ribbons of blues, yellows, pinks, greens and mauves, not the practical gray, white or brown most once seemed to be.

St. Paul's Church, historic and pretty enough for an atheist to love, now is linked in a Grand Parade of greenery with city hall.



HMCS Skeena sails in Halifax harbor past Old Town Clock

Peacetime emphasizes what a civilized city this old maritime beauty is. Even its car drivers invariably stop to let pedestrians cross and those dealing with the public seem helpful and cheerful.

Other changes around town are of special interest to veterans. The Wren Officers quarters now houses young male naval officers. The Admiralty House, a handsome Georgian building with mahogany woodwork and marble fireplaces, once the officers' mess, now is a naval museum with the discordant name of Marcom (Maritime Command).

The anniversary celebrations run from July 25 to 27 and functions are being hosted by the Maritime Wren Association and the Royal Canadian Navy Association.

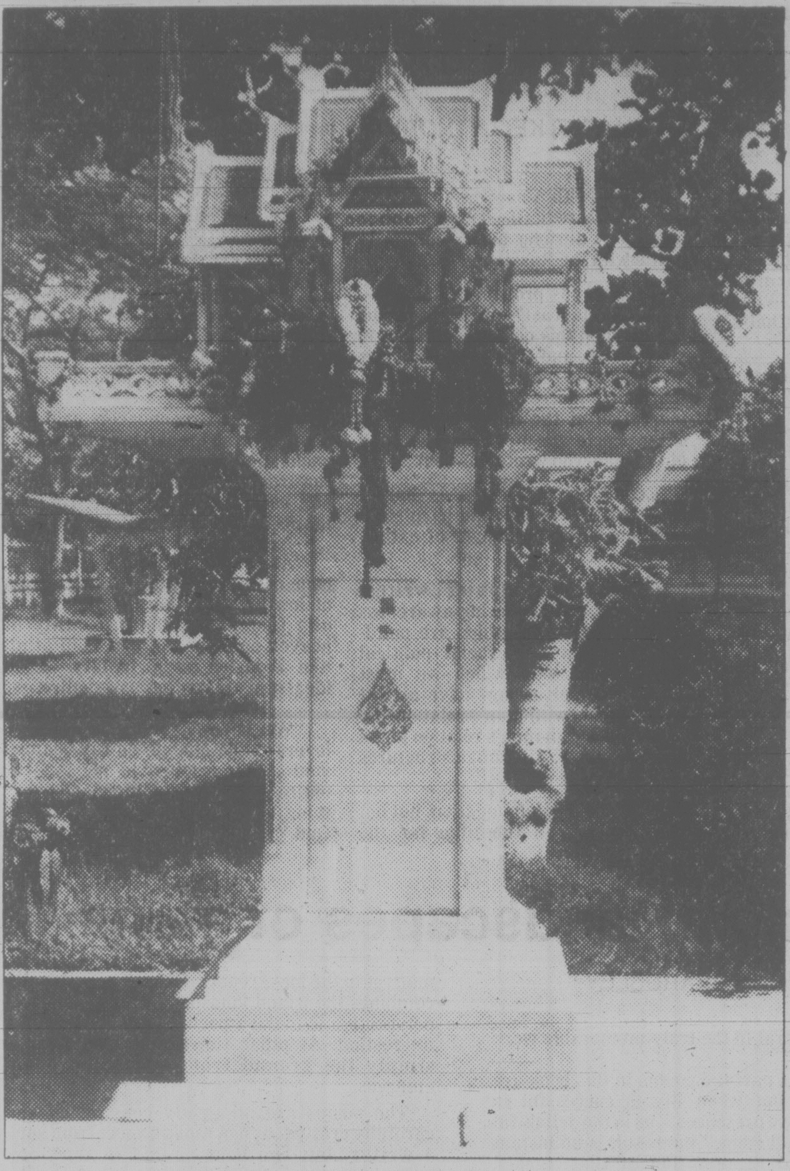
Thai spirit houses are everywhere



Resident god in spirit house protects the owner from harm

AROUND the WORLD with STAN DELAPLANE

BANGKOK — "Since the inaugural flight to Bangkok is over, I'm no longer in the tender care of Thai International Airways. I moved from the 105-year-old Oriental at $60 a day to one that is surprisingly good and costs only $12.

"A Singha beer — (the bottle is twice the size of ours) — costs $2. A spicy dish of hot fish from the street stand outside is 35 cents. Find a shady shelter from the wet, oppressive heat and that's lunch. It costs $720 (round trip, Seattle or Los Angeles) to the land of the white elephant, but once you're here you can live on very little."

Our Curious Correspondent is staying on in Thailand for awhile.

"For dinner I can have lobsters or prawns or oysters from the Gulf cooked to order. A dish of spiced chicken. Excellent beer made of hops yeast and malt imported from Germany. 'Only the water is Thai,' said the German brewmaster. All this for less than $5.

"The Thai who runs the food stand can't speak English but his American T-shirt does. It's lettered: 'You made me love you, you woke me up to do it.'

"On a four-hour boat ride on the Oriental Queen, we passed houses on teak supports jutting into the Chao Phya river. Most of them had 'Pepsi' signs on the front porch.

"Orange-robed Buddhist priests are everywhere. Shaven heads, sacks over their shoulders, begging bowls in hand. You gain merit by putting food in his bowl. And merit in this life insures an improved state in the next.

"Our guide said: 'I was a monk for three months when I was 20. I walked eight miles a day with a begging bowl, starting early in the morning.'

"He said there are three kinds of monks. 'One is a lifetime monk. That is very hard for the monk can eat only two meals a day, both before noon.

" 'A monk like me serves three months to make himself a better citizen. The third is a runaway boy who becomes a monk for shelter. He is the sad looking one.'

"The monk may only own a razor, a needle and thread, a strainer for drinking water, a girdle for securing his under robe. The modern age permits an umbrella. I imagine the monk thanks Buddha for that.

"There are three hundred (they say) gilt temples in this holy city and spirit houses are everywhere. It's a small doll house structure perched on a wooden post. Inside there's a statue of the owner's favorite god. He is the guardian spirit, the chao of the place.

"You see them on houses. On top of hotels. In gas stations. The people attend them with flowers and food and incense. And the spirit house is informed of the arrival and departure of guests. Of births and deaths in the family.

"A vice-president of Thai Airways told me: 'An expert — not just anybody — installs the spirit house. Each house is different. Some face east toward the rising sun. They shouldn't face south which is down. The house should be placed where it is never in the shade.'

"There's a marble spirit house at Thai Airways headquarters that cost $50,000.

"The Oriental Queen river ride took us to the Vehad Chumroon Palace where King Rama IV, Mongkut, spent many a lively summer. He had 35 wives who produced 82 children.

"His score is remarkable. He was 47 when he took his first wife, having spent 27 chaste years as a monk.

"When asked how he kept up the dizzy pace, Mongkut replied: 'I must. So my subjects will know I have not declined into old age.'

TRAVEL TOPICS

by Peter Kimpton

Some of the latest airline news — CP Air now flies the big orange DC 10 bird weekly from Vancouver to Sydney, Australia. We wish them well. Still with CP Air, their Skybird seat sale from October 27th through December 10th is a beaut! Vancouver — Toronto or Montreal $94.00 one way. Check availability with us. Air New Zealand have ordered five Boeing 747s. They'll have the first one flying SOPAC next May.

Club Med's winter 80/81 program is available for booking. Not all prices are in, but the same-as-always excellent holiday packages are. One of the finer things in life to enjoy. We have two couples going back to Tahiti for their 4th time around!

Trusthouses Forte have put their London hotels on a "White Sale!". From now until August 31st, they offer a 20% discount at the Strand Palace, Regent Palace, Waldorf, Westbury and White's if booked through a travel agency.

The 7th Annual Island Holidays Pro Tennis Classic kicks off on Sept. 27th at the Royal Lahaina on Maui. For all tennis players, including me, a great draw to a lovely resort and packages are available.

One of my consultants from my previous office in Abbotsford has a cousin in Maui, Jim Bruce, who owns Holo Holo Maui Tours. Jim came up with a new approach to fund raising. He talked 20 people into a $10.00 shot for the "Insider's Tour of Maui". Itinerary was the laundry room of the Royal Lahaina, the kitchen at McDonald's, the local gasohol factory, a sewage treatment plant and a 5-minute, all-you-can-grab fest at the Makawao dump! Date of the tour — April 1st!

Adios until next week.

E. D. Ward-Harris

He worked for us

GOOD WORK*, by E.F. Schumacher. Fitzhenery & Whiteside. $4.95.

E.F. Schumacher wrote only two books. The first, Small Is Beautiful, contained a powerful attack on conventional economics and technology, and the value system supporting both. That book, which also mapped out a sane route toward a sustainable way of life, sold in the millions and confirmed his friend Barbara Ward's description of him as one belonging to that intensely creative minority who have changed the direction of human thought.

That work was followed by Guide for the Perplexed, in which Schumacher offered the individual a philosophical framework; in essence a guide to the moral values that underpinned the first work.

Only two books. But thanks to the logic of his arguments and his lucid style, they were enough to ensure that his ideas remained alive. All the same, one hungered for more, because Schumacher was the kind of rare individual one cannot have enough of. Well, it happens that before he died in 1977 he arranged for the publication of a series of lectures he gave during a U.S. tour in the mid-1970s, and that book duly appeared.

The good news today is that it (Good Work) is now available in paperback. In addition to the lectures, the edition includes three chapters based on earlier written essays that are relevant to the main work, as well as a lengthy postscript by Peter N. Gillingham, an American who is heavily involved in the continuance of Schumacher's work.

To the many thousands who have been actively influenced by Schumacher's ideas (and these are chiefly younger people) there is nothing more that needs to be said, but to those who remain unacquainted with the man's work a little background material may prove to be a persuasive factor.

Schumacher was a fully trained statistician who was unimpressed by statistics. And understandably so, for, as every politician knows, statistics do not have to be accurate; they have to be significant. He was also an economist of world standing who was a constant source of embarrassment to the British establishment. The trouble was, his ideas were too radical to stomach but too powerful to ignore. This worked to the world's advantage, for after Britain had used his talents selectively he felt free to peddle his ideas to a wider and more appreciative audience.

During wars, Britain is notorious for putting square pegs into round holes, so it should not surprise anyone to learn that during the 1939-45 bother the brilliant economist worked as a farm laborer. But Schumacher was an uncommon laborer, for in his spare time he drew up a plan for a new international monetary payments clearing system — the very plan that Lord Keynes adopted as the official British government proposal on the subject. Later, the manure-slinger and ditch-digger became the principal author of the famous Beveridge report on full employment.

After the war, Schumacher acted for many years as economic adviser to the nationalized British coal industry. His brilliance was never questioned, but he became highly unpopular in official circles for his persistant, lone-wolf warnings on the dangers of over-dependence on oil — years and years before OPEC came into existence and the Arabs started to use oil as a political weapon. He upset his bosses even more by insisting that nuclear power posed an even greater danger because of ecological and environmental hazards.

During his period with the coal industry he became president of the Soil Association and a director of the famous Scott Bader Commonwealth, the pioneer common-ownership company in Britain, as well as chairman of the Intermediate Technology Group, so when he parted from the brain-numbing, soul-destroying, intellectually barren desert of bureaucracy he was ideally placed to plunge into the work for which he was uniquely qualified and for which he is justly revered.

He was invited to India by that country's government and asked to solve the ghastly agricultural problem. Later, he went to Zambia for the same purpose, and then on to other developing countries where he looked into both agricultural and industrial operations. Everywhere he went his message was the same: big is bad; bigger is worse — but small is beautiful. Translated into action, that meant developing and making known technologies appropriate to the needs and resources of poor people in poor communities: tools and equipment expressly designed to be relatively small, simple, capital-saving, and non-injurious to the environment.

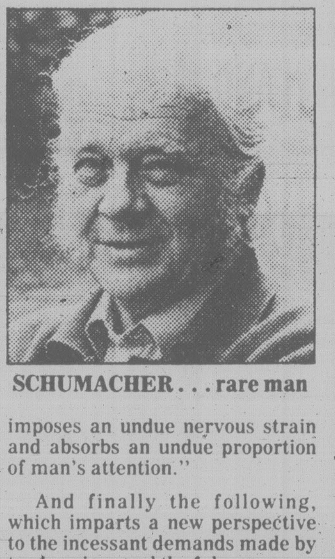
Initially, Schumacher's group in England devised all the appropriate scaled-down technology but today more than 20 similar groups are operating in as many countries and UN agencies, governments, and voluntary agencies have taken up the concept.

Schumacher, like Barbara Ward, strove for greater equality between and within nations and he hammered home the point that rich countries are in even greater need than poor nations of a new technology that is smaller, capital-saving, less demanding on raw materials, and environmentally non-violent. And he stressed the need for the dispersal of industry into smaller units on both economic and humanitarian grounds. To provide a glimpse of his thinking, here are a few remarks taken from one of his speeches:

"The amount of genuine leisure available in a society is generally in inverse proportion to the amount of labor-saving machinery it employs."

"Unless there are conscious efforts to the contrary, wants will always rise faster than the ability to meet them."

"It is a great evil — perhaps the greatest evil — of modern industrial society that, through its immensely involved nature, it imposes an undue nervous strain and absorbs an undue proportion of man's attention."



SCHUMACHER . . . rare man

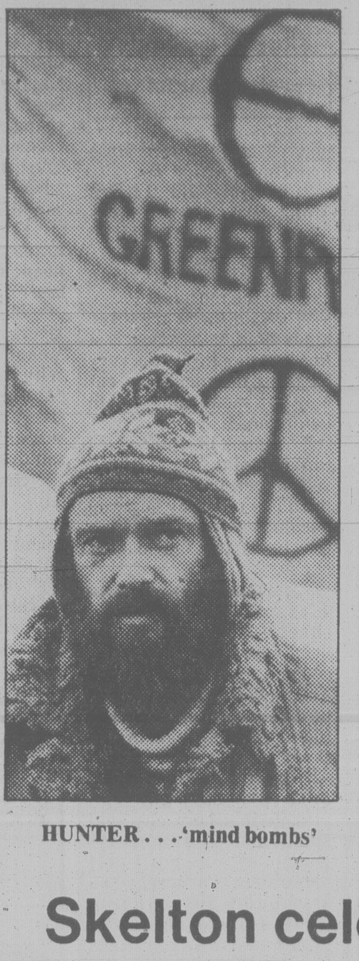
And finally the following, which imparts a new perspective to the incessant demands made by trade unions and the false assumption that money is the sole reason for working:

"The basic aim of modern industrialism is not to make work satisfying but to raise productivity; its proudest achievement is labor-saving, whereby labor is stamped with the mark of undesirability. But what is undesirable cannot confer dignity; so the working life of a laborer (manual and white-collared) is a life without dignity. The result, not surprisingly, is a spirit of sullen irresponsibility which refuses to be mollified by higher wage awards but is often stimulated by them."

Those responsible for this book had the good sense not to reduce the lectures to formal essays by editing, so the anecdotes and humor that distinguished Schumacher's lectures have been left in. The happy result is that we can visualize Fritz Schumacher at his best, on his feet, often thinking aloud, always employing his personality, creative energy and marvellous mind to put over the message that a way must be found to allow people in rich and poor countries to engage in creative and satisfying work, earn a decent living, live becomingly — and all without harming planet earth.

His were not just words: he proved time and again by application that his philosophy was practical. The fact that bosses of big trade unions, big industrialists, opportunists and misguided politicians were united against him confirmed the rightness of his aims.

Few had the opportunity to hear Schumacher speak, but his essential thoughts are accessible to all through his books. Good Work can be read alone, but as its contents represent an extension of the two earlier books all three should be required reading. Fritz Schumacher was a great and good man who labored mightily for mankind. It seems to me that, in gratitude, reading what he had to say is the very least we can do.



HUNTER . . . 'mind bombs'

The Greenpeace story

WARRIORS OF THE RAINBOW*, by Robert Hunter. Holt, Rinehart & Winston. $10.25.

By WALTER KELLYTHORNE

In October 1969 when America wanted to explode a nuclear bomb in the Aleutian Islands, Robert Hunter and other warriors of the rainbow — captained by John C. Cormack, "Lord of the Piston Rings" — headed to Amchitka on an 80-foot halibut seiner.

Their object: Stop the bomb or die trying.

The bomb went off. The Greenpeacers survived.

More, though: there would be no other bombs tested in that part of the world, and Greenpeace (and Hunter in particular, at that time a writer for the Vancouver Sun) had succeeded in blasting the world with "mind bombs" that would focus world attention on the next target: whales.

Whale graveyards and abandoned processing plants dotted the British Columbia coast up to Alaska; those, and Hunter's experience with Skana the "killer" whale in Vancouver, convinced him that Greenpeace efforts should be directed at ending the annual Pacific whale hunt before there were no more whales to kill.

Armed with a new crew, new energy and a revitalized boat, Greenpeace left Jericho beach in 1974 to battle with the Russians.

The story is probably familiar — in outline at least — to anyone who has lived on this coast for the last 10 years or so, and Hunter's account is an invaluable record of the details of that story; more, it's a unique documentation of the minds and hearts of the people who made that story and of the man who wrote this book.

Ecological awareness is hardly new, but like whales and harp seals and people it is in danger of extinction.

Greenpeace, Hunter writes, "grew out of a flickering awareness that all our relationships are political, and that the crucial political relationships with which we must concern ourselves now have almost nothing to do with man's relationship to man, but with man's relation to the earth itself . . . All human structures inevitably rest upon it."

A solid enough foundation, but not solid enough all the time for the people trying to make a stand upon it: Hunter's story of the infighting and personality clashes will also sound familiar to anyone who has ever worked in a small group. What is so remarkable in this instance is the fact that Greenpeace, from its beginnings as a minuscule fringe group organized by refugee Americans, is now an international organization whose word and conviction have been tested repeatedly and never found wanting when the struggle was joined.

The price Greenpeacers paid was high: mental breakdown, emotional exhaustion, divorce, death. And the rewards? This passage from Hunter's book will tell of those. He is in the ocean with some dolphins:

"As I floated there . . . with . . . none of us having the least intention of hurting the other, merely mutually fascinated, the possibility of heaven on earth did not seem at all like a vision or a fantasy or an ideal or a dream. It was a reality.

"We hovered there, like secret lovers in the blue-green ray-beamed void . . . It seemed to me . . . the entire world was a temple and every thing I met was a manifestation of God."

Skelton celebrates Island landscapes of 'home'

THIS TREE WILL BE HERE FOR A THOUSAND YEARS*, by Robert Bly. Fitzhenry and Whiteside. $6.50.

LANDMARKS*, by Robin Skelton. Sono Nis Press/Oolichan Books. $5.95.

By DOUG BEARDSLEY

Robert Bly is one of America's most widely read poets. This Tree Will Be Here For A Thousand Years, his sixth slim collection, is a sequel to his first book published almost two decades ago.

In a brief but important introduction entitled "The Two Presences," Bly outlines the kind of poem he's hoping to achieve. He writes of a "second consciousness out there among plants and animals," a presence he hears from time to time "under the words of poems." We share a consciousness with nature, Bly suggests, and he attempts to capture that other energy, "the tear inside the stone," in these poems.

Unfortunately for Bly, and for those contemporary writers who are called post-modernists, a particular technique, theory, or artistic process has little to do with the making of a good poem. Such things as passion, energy, emotion, imagination, rhetoric, talent and craft are, and will always be, central to the truly memorable work of art.

For the most part the poems in this book are disappointing, but when Bly is successful in merging "the two presences," as in the delightful "Reading in Fall Rain," the result is an instant awareness and illumination of that "green world" that the poet so deeply loves.

Robin Skelton, one of our country's most accomplished poets, needs no introduction to readers of this newspaper.

Of his latest book, his 65th title, he writes: "When first I set foot on Vancouver Island . . . I had a sudden overmastering feeling that I had 'come home' . . . but only very slowly have I become able to express a little of this feeling in poetry . . . only now in Landmarks do I feel that I have made a true beginning."

Rather than "a true beginning," there is an indication that Landmarks is a summing-up of a kind of "middle period" in the poet's life.

Most of the poems are an evocation of Vancouver Island and are therefore of special interest to the local reader. Skelton occasionally combines the island landscape with a historical perspective to make a poem that is particularly interesting. At other times that landscape is simply the ground from which the poem emerges.

The poems are all tightly constructed and carefully crafted, as one would expect from such a writer, but the best poems in the book ("Choice", the first part of "The Letter", the long title poem, and " Prince Edward Island") seem to signify a new as well as "a true beginning," in their attempt to open out to "my identity another I,/which nears me now."

The poems mentioned above suggest a movement away from the tense formalism that has so characterized Skelton's work in the past; a sense of form that, on occasion, makes the content disingenous. An earlier exception to this style was the book, The Hunting Dark. Published in 1971, it remains the poet's best collection to date.

Landmarks suggests that Robin Skelton may be on the verge of a major breakthrough, opening to new possibilities in both his work and himself. His next book of poems should make exciting reading indeed.

BITTERSWEET*, by Susan Strasberg. Longman. $14.50.

MY SIDE OF THE ROAD*, by Dorothy Lamour. Prentice-Hall. $15.95.

By ANTHONY JENKINS

It would be easy to dismiss Susan Strasberg's life-story as another too-much-too-soon saga. But having looked over the abyss and struggled back from it, she now takes an unusually candid look at herself. Perhaps she is too nice a girl to let out all her anger, so that her book is not an archetypal descent-into-Hell in the manner of Elizabeth Ashley's Actress; but even so, as one individual's case-history, her account makes interesting reading.

Susan's father, Lee, is the visionary power behind the Actor's Studio; her mother, Paula, was a respected actress and a well-known coach to "method" actors like Marilyn Monroe. She grew up among the famous in a home that was more like a theatre workshop.

America's aspiring actors would drop by to talk and learn, or to be fed from her mother's near empty fridge: "These people were supremely talented, alive, sensitive, eccentric, and some were neurotic and miserable. I thought everyone was like that. If they weren't, I assumed something must be wrong with them."

So Susan traded on her emotions, partly because everyone else did and partly to attract her parents. For though the "Method" depends on reaching out to one's fellows, Lee shut himself off from his children in his work, his books, his music; in consequence, his daughter felt "unlovable."

It was not until she was 15 that she became an actress, and even then her parents would have preferred her to wait till she passed the awkward child-actor syndrome. But on stage before her first audience, "All my intensity, my excess intensity, magically became virtues, something to be shared. I felt more than incredibly alive; I felt I had come home."

Her success led to work in films and TV, and by the time she was 17 she was the youngest person to receive star-billing on Broadway as the originator of Anne Frank. She was Anne Frank: poised between nervous childhood and emergent adulthood.

But she was still Lee Strasberg's daughter, and her mother — a marvellously warm and open person — began to dictate her career: "I resented my mother's coaching; and yet I was unable to do without it."

A wounding affair with Richard Burton, sleeping pills, the psychiatrist's couch, animosity and attraction towards her parents, marked the first stages of her downward plunge. A disastrous marriage led to drugs and violence, until she was pulled up short at the birth of her daughter.

The child had a defective heart; was Susan's drug-taking responsible? After a particularly violent scene with her husband she took stock of herself: "I had chosen the role of victim but I could not let our child be victimized by our excesses, nor would I tolerate it any longer."

Ironically, after the fame and the fall, Susan eventually found her real self as a mother to her daughter. Though she is still a successful actress, she has arrived at the everyday woman other people dream of escaping.

On the other hand, reading My Side of the Road is to discover that beneath her exotic image as the girl-in-the-sarong, Dorothy Lamour has always been a middle-American hometown girl. When she was required to wear the sarong for her first film, she was embarrassed: "I was . . . self-conscious about my feet, which I felt were unattractive."

This as-told-to story by Dick McInnes definitely presents Lamour as she wants to be seen — her side of things; there are no self-lacerating analyses here. Despite a first-person stance, McInnes stays outside his subject and makes her sound chatty and "just folks": "So while everyone else was coffee-breaking, I would just go sit in a corner . . . I was stunned to think that anyone would think that I was snooty, but realized that was the way it looked. I followed Colley's advice (to chat with the crew), and before long the crew and I were all one big happy family. And that's the way it went from that time on."

It's difficult to judge whether the effect is intentional; the book suffers from its insipid style, but its unreality certainly captures Lamour's attitude to her own stardom. The pictures drift by as though they were happening to someone else, and what matters are those experiences that teach her how to work with other people. For instance, she judges her colleagues by their unselfishness, on their kindness to her as a beginner, and she never forgot to treat other neophytes with similar consideration when she too became a star.

Yet despite the book's publicity-handout style, one feels that Lamour is a genuinely nice lady. Born in the charity ward of a New Orleans hospital, she never lost touch with her humble background. The very exoticism of her name resulted from a misprint of Lambour, the surname she'd adopted from her step-father.

Beneath the book's sunny surface, one detects the occasional glint of ill-feeling. She cannot hide her distress at being pushed to the side for the last of her famous "Road" pictures and finds Bing Crosby's attitude to her, especially over money and star status, both cold and puzzling. She is also slightly bitter at the way people for whom she had done favors in the past were suddenly "unavailable" when she was no longer box-office.

But at her life's centre stand her husband and sons. She left Hollywood because of Bill's health and to give her boys a proper home life: "Let's face it, a lot of children growing up in Hollywood get into trouble."

The star who sold war-bonds for Roosevelt became the part-time star who cared more about being a wife and mother, attending PTA meetings, sitting as a commissioner for Baltimore's Civic Centre. A strong marriage and a close family proved more valuable than the hokey glamour of Lamour-of-the-islands.

Her integrity also gave her some loyal audiences and colleagues. After her success in the long tour of Hello Dolly, she still does plays on the supper-club circuit from time to time.

Taken together, these two books pinpoint the difference between the styles and values of the sixties and the forties. The fact that Lamour's book is not that exciting is not because nice people are boring. Mainly it's due to the crassness of McInnes' style, but it also has something to do with the fact that Strasberg has had farther to travel as a person, has learned from that experience, and knows how to tell it.

Consultant ban

Phase two of Finance Minister Hugh Curtis' cost-cutting program came Friday with the announcement that no outside colsultants will be hired for 30 days.

Curtis announced a freeze on government hiring two weeks ago as a result of falling resource revenues and said at the time there may be a freeze on consultants and distribution of discretionary grants.

The freeze on outside consultants comes on the heels of a warning by Premier Bill Bennett that an export tax on natural gas would drastically curb future B.C. revenues.

The latest freeze does not apply to consultants currently under contract.

A reception followed with a buffet supper at the Brentwood Inn. Sandy McRae acted as master of ceremonies. Charles Cruickshank proposed the toast to the bride, to which the groom responded.

Before the judge

Judge William Ostler handed a one-day jail term and $1,500 fine Friday in Victoria provincial court to a 38-year-old man who defrauded a bank and Chargex of $4,208.12.

Clinton Francis Shaw, formerly of 517 Langford but now of Calgary, pleaded guilty to fraud.

Crown counsel Clinton Kittle said Shaw contacted the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce Chargex centre on Aug. 17, 1978, and said he was William Shaw, his deceased father. He said he had lost his credit card and requested a new one, which he received.

Kittle said Shaw wasn't caught until Nov. 10, 1978, when he was at Denny's Restaurant, 3100 Douglas, trying to pay an $8.35 bill with his Chargex card.

Court was told that, when the cashier decided to telephone the Chargex centre to verify the card, Shaw left. He was apprehended later at his residence.

Shaw had previous convictions for theft over $200, false pretences and fraud. He served a one-month sentence when he was convicted of false pretences Oct. 18, 1966, in Vancouver.

Two men were jointly charged with possession of $22,000 worth of stolen jewelry taken from a May 27 break-in at the Old Gold Shop, 909 Douglas.

James Roy Knox, 38, of 476 Lampson, and Gary Norman Linton, 27, of 708 Suffolk, were charged and Linton was released on $1,000 recognizance with a cash deposit or surety in the same amount. Linton was remanded until next Friday for election of his trial method.

Judge Blake Allan remanded Knox in custody until next Wednesday for a possible bail hearing.

An 18-year-old youth who pleaded guilty to possession of stolen property was given a 30-day jail term by Allan.

Dan Defrane, 4231 Carey, was given the sentence after Allan learned he was on two sets of probation stemming from convictions this year. Defrane was convicted March 13 of theft under $200 and was given a suspended sentence and six months probation. He was convicted May 20 of fraud and impersonation and was given another suspended sentence and a further 18 months probation.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang said that on May 7, the manager of a lacrosse team had two team sweaters, valued at $55 each, on a clothesline to dry. Lang said the manager heard a noise about 9:30 p.m., looked out and noticed the sweaters were missing.

The manager informed his team of the incident and asked the players to be on the lookout for numbers 12 and 30, the two stolen sweaters.

On May 29, Lang continued, one of the players spotted one of the two stolen sweaters on a woman in the 3000-block Tillicum. When asked about the sweater, the woman said, "Danny gave it to me."

Defrane was eventually confronted by the player and an incident occurred which resulted in Defrane being hospitalized four days with head injuries, Lang stated.

Defrane told Saanich police on June 6 that he found the sweaters at Northridge School.

Allan asked Defrane why he took the sweaters.

"Who said I couldn't have bought these shirts at the Salvation Army?" Defrane retorted.

THE CODELCO OPEN

The Codelco Open in Lima, Peru, held in April, saw Hernan Salazar, Peru, win the 42-man tournament with 6 points, ahead of Silva of Chile and Cifuentes of Cuba 5½ points each. Araya of Chile and Najdorf of Argentina placed third with five each. Here's a game from the Codelco.

WHITE: Najdorf

3. B-N2 N-QB3
4. 0-0 P-K3
5. P-B4 N-B3

A COMPUTER FIRST

A computer as beaten a Grandmaster! This occurred during a simultaneous exhibition given by Grandmaster Larry Christiansen in Schenectady in May. He played 28 games, losing four, drawing 3 and winning 21. Among those he lost was one to Sargon 2.5, a fantastic computer — though, to tell the truth, Larry could have won at various stages of the game — he actually overlooked the mate in one that ended the game. Here's the game itself:

WHITE: Christiansen
BLACK: Sargon 2.5

1. P-QB4 P-K4
2. N-QB3 N-KB3
3. N-B3 N-B3
4. P-KN3 B-N5
5. B-N2 0-0
6. 0-0 P-Q4
7. PxP NxP

10. PxB Q-Q5 (a)
11. R-N1 R-Q1
12. B-N2 Q-Q3
13. P-Q3 P-QB3
14. Q-B2 B-N5
15. P-KR3 B-K3
16. Q-B3 P-B3!
17. P-B4 N-N3
18. K-R2 (b) BxQRP
19. R-QR1 B-Q4
20. P-K4 B-B2
21. P-Q4 Q-Q2
22. P-B5 N-K2
23. P-N4 P-QR3
24. K-R1 P-QN4
25. P-N5! B-B5
26. PxP BxR
27. RxB PxP
28. P-Q5 R-KB1
29. B-B3 PxP (c)
30. R-N1 ch N-N3
31. PxN?? QxP mate!

(a) Maybe the Grandmaster will not see that is Rook is threatened. Immediately 10 . . . Q-Q3 is better.

(b) 18. P-B5, QxNP; 19. PxN, BxKRP; 20. PxP ch, KxP; 21. R-B2, R-Q4; P-Q4 should win.

(c) 29 . . . Q-Q3; 30. R-N1 ch, K-R1; 31. P-K5 wins.

The solution to the problem above is: 1. N-B7, PxBP; 2. N-K6 mate; or 1. N-B7, PxKP; 2. Q-B8 mate; or 1. N-B7, N-B5; 2. PxN mate; etc.

Women to march

Greater Victoria women, some carrying torches, will walk through downtown streets tonight "as a reminder that Victoria is not safe for women after dark."

The walk, which will begin at 10 p.m. at Harbour Road on the Esquimalt side of the Johnson Street Bridge and end at Beacon Hill Park, is sponsored by the Rape/Assault Centre and other women's groups.

Women in other Canadian cities will take similar action, called "women take back the night."

Organizers will be handing out material stating that women want to be able to enjoy the dark without fear of harassment, attack or rape.

ONE WAY TO COOL IT: Youngsters taking part in the Saanich parks department's version of the Olympic Games at Cedar Hill Recreation Centre Friday cool off on water slide made of plastic sheet. Between 300 and 350 children age 6 to 12 took part in the games involving municipality's 16 playgrounds. A variety of unorthodox games put the emphasis on fun instead of winning and from the looks of it, that's just what everyone had.

Slain violinist 'fought for life'

Times News Services

NEW YORK — Helen Hagnes Mintiks, the B.C.-born concert violinist whose nude, bound body was found Thursday morning in an airshaft at the Metropolitan Opera House, was alive when she was thrown from the opera house roof, an autopsy found Friday.

Elliot Gross, the city's chief medical examiner, said the woman died as a result of a fractured skull and broken ribs and limbs sustained in a fall through a narrow rooftop airshaft onto a beam three floors below.

He declined to say whether Ms. Mintiks had been attacked sexually or to reveal the exact time of her death. But sources close to the police investigation said the 30-year-old musician apparently had "fought hard for her life" as she was being beaten and raped.

That desperate struggle left a trail of barrettes, a fountain pen, clothing and blood on a dreary back staircase near six large, deafeningly loud electric ventilation fans on the roof of the building at Lincoln Centre, sources close to the investigation said. The victim's shoes were found on the roof.

These were among the clues detectives were examining as they tried to identify the killer, whom they believe the victim knew and trusted well enough to walk with during a break in the orchestra's performance Wednesday night.

In an telephone interview from his home in Aldergrove, B.C., Mrs. Mintiks' father, Edward Hagnes, choked back tears and said New York was "much too wild" for his daughter.

"She was just a country girl and New York, with all its violence, was no place for her," he said. "I was definitely against her moving to the big city."

Police were interviewing about 250 people who were working in the theatre during the performance, including 116 members of the ballet troupe scheduled to leave on Sunday for Washington.

Police said they had ruled out as suspects Mrs. Mintiks' husband Janis, who reported her missing Wednesday night, and ballet star Valery Panov, whom she said she was going to visit when she was last seen.

Antarctic killer whale hunt abolished

BRIGHTON, England (AP) — Member nations of the International Whaling Commission agreed unanimously Friday to ban the hunting of killer whales in the Antarctic by factory ships beginning next year.

Some reductions in the quotas of other whale species were approved while negotiations on still others will resume today.

A U.S. representatives said many delegates at the 24-country conference believe all commercial whaling may be banned worldwide within the next five years.

Earlier Friday, a half-dozen "save-the-whale" activists staged a demonstration in black hoods and bloodstained white robes outside the meeting site to protest the commission's failure to approve a three-year prohibition on sperm whale hunting.

The protesters chained themselves briefly to a sidewalk barrier outside the conference hotel. Pinned to their robes were the flags of the six countries whose negative votes Thursday prevented approval of the sperm whale hunting ban — Canada, Chile, Iceland, Japan, South Korea and the Soviet Union.

Conservationists say the world's sperm whale population is threatened, but major whaling states maintain there is no evidence of this.

U.S. whaling commissioner Richard Frank, emerging from the quota negotiations of the IWC's technical committee Friday, said it was "moving towards smaller quotas for the next year."

But he admitted negotiators still were deadlocked.

"There will be smaller quotas in minke and sperm whale hunting and in some of the other species, and the United States delegation is moving a proposal to ban the hunting of killer whales by factory ships, that is pelagic (deep-sea) hunting of killer whales in the southern hemisphere."

Bolivia aid chopped by U.S.

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie cut off virtually all remaining U.S. aid to Bolivia Friday, intensifying the Carter administration's actions to show disapproval of the week-old military coup in the South American country.

Muskie also announced plans to cut back the size of the U.S. embassy staff in La Paz and withdraw the eight-man military group that had been overseeing aid to the Bolivian military.

Muskie's action Friday will block or slow down delivery of some $115 million in aid that had been previously committed, except in cases of contracts that for legal reasons cannot be broken. Only humanitarian food aid programs, distributed by private or international aid organizations to some 200,000 destitute people, remained unaffected by Friday's action, officials said.

Muskie's statement, which he read to newsmen at the State Department, also denounced the junta for widespread jailings and for the reported beating and torture of "hundreds of political, religious and labor leaders being held by the new regime.

Mir-Salim chosen Iran's PM

The Associated Press

Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr appointed Mostafa Mir-Salim, the clergy-backed chief of state police, as Iran's new prime minister today, Tehran radio reported.

Meanwhile, the Pars news agency reported eight men had been executed — four by firing squad today in the southwest town of Andimeshk, including one with links to the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency; the other four Friday in the northeast town of Mashad.

The state radio broadcast, monitored in London, said the appointment will be submitted to Iran's Parliament, or Majlis, for approval. There was no indication when Parliament might consider the issue.

The radio said Mir-Salim met for two hours with the president this morning then told Pars that Bani-Sadr's letter would be submitted to the Majlis today.

Lockout cuts off beer supply

British Columbia's three major breweries locked out members of the Brewery, Winery and Distillery Workers Union today, bringing beer production to a halt in the province and forcing the government to look south of the border for fresh supplies.

The breweries imposed the lockout at 2 a.m. making good their threat to shut down at midnight Friday unless the 1,400-member union accepted a final offer.

Talks between the union and Brewery Labor Relations Association representing Molson's, Labbatt's and Carling O'Keefe have been deadlocked since Monday.

The union is seeking a $1.05 an hour increase each year in a two-year agreement while the breweries have offered $1 an hour each year in a three-year contract. Bottling line workers now are paid $10.10 an hour.

The union refused to put the offer to its membership, although locals at Creston and Victoria voted Friday in apparent defiance of their executive. Results of the votes were expected to be released later today.

Union spokesman John Langley has said there was some dissension within the membership over the decision not to hold a vote on the offer, but said the breweries must first settle with Pacific Breweries Distributors' office workers who rejected a contract offer Wednesday.

Barry Granger, vice-president of the 110-member union local in Victoria, said today he was disappointed with the lockout action.

"We have been prepared to talk any time. We have a strike mandate but we didn't give notice we'd use it in hopes of settling the contract.

"But we don't seem to get too much good-faith bargaining with this association."

A union executive meeting was to be held today and a full membership meeting is scheduled for Monday at the Union Centre on Quadra Street.

Granger said the primary issue in the dispute is not so much wages as union security. The companies want more control over hiring halls, which the union has run for the past 20 years.

While beer parlor waiters face the prospect of layoffs as supplies evaporate, 6,000 12-bottle cases of U.S. beer were being shipped to Vancouver from Seattle.

A branch spokesman said procedures during the last strike — a three-month shutdown in the summer or 1978 — are being reviewed.

During that shutdown the branch imported 8.3 million dozen beer from the U.S. and Canada Customs relaxed its two-case declaration limit to 10.

Several liquor store spokesmen said they did not expect import stocks to last long, even at prices several dollars higher than domestic brands.

Canada Customs' acting operations manager John Bouzek said he expects long lineups at all border crossings this weekend as B.C. residents return from the United States with their allotted quantity of two gallons of U.S. beer.

The brewery union now is affiliated with the B.C. Government Employees Union, whose members staff government liquor stores. Bob Moore, a BCGEU spokesman, said members have agreed not to act against liquor stores unless imported beer hurts a strike.

2 boys drown in rescue attempt

LANGLEY (CP) — Two young boys died Friday near here while trying to save a third who also drowned.

Police say four youngsters were playing in a gravel pit when eight-year-old Gurjit Pejatta of Clearwater fell from a one-metre bank into a 1.6-metre-deep pond.

His nine-year-old brother Sumin fell into the water while trying to rescue him and 10-year-old Butta Bassi of Richmond then fell into the pond while trying to help the brothers. All three were non-swimmers.

Another brother, 10-year-old Gagandeep Pejatta, jumped into the water, but was unable to help the three boys. He swam three metres across the small pond and summoned help from their parents who were working at a nearby field.

RCMP say Gurjit Pejatta was dead on arrival at hospital. Extensive efforts failed to revive the other two boys.

Youth on mend after jolt

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Kevin Berndt hopes his recent brush with death will remind others of the danger of power lines.

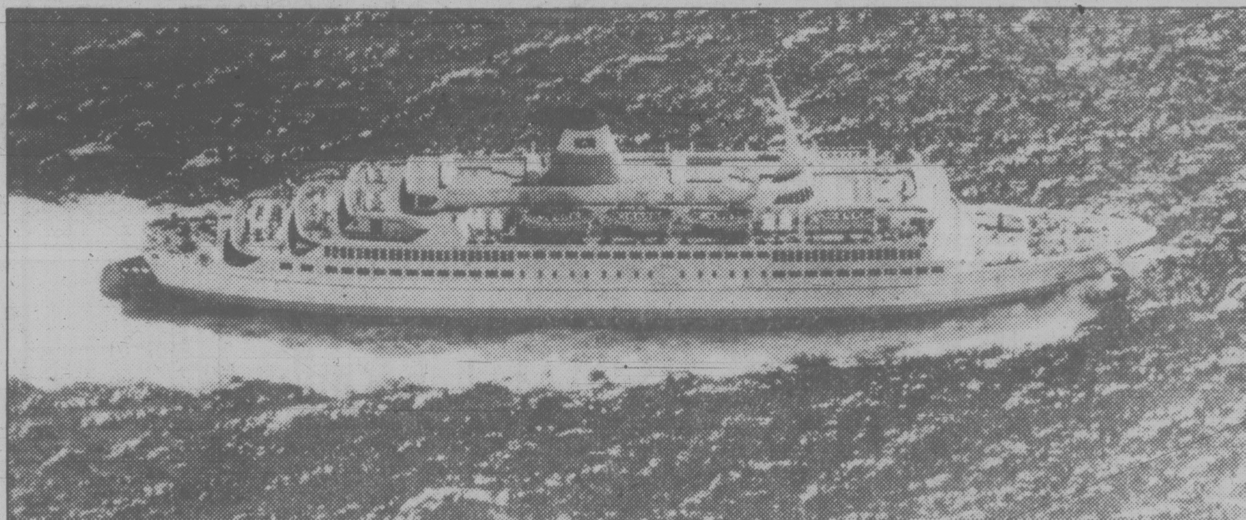
The 17-year-old Prince George youth is recovering in hospital from burns he received when he accidentally touched a 7,200-volt B.C. Hydro wire.

He and a friend had been using a transformer platform as a treehouse and Berndt was thrown seven metres to the ground after touching the wire with his head.

Cliff Day, hydro district manager, described Berndt as a very lucky boy and said the company had no idea the boys were using the platform as a treehouse.

"I don't remember too much," Berndt said from his hospital bed where he is recovering from first- and second-degree burns to his head, face, neck, shoulders and back.

"I guess I was knocked out. The first thing I remember is the ambulance attendants getting me up."



B.C.'s once-elegant cruise now plagued with problems

By PAUL MINVIELLE

B.C. Ferry Corporation's cruise up the scenic Inside Passage, a once-elegant travel package that enticed the world's wealthy, has deteriorated so much it's beginning to attract mainly what a crew member calls "the barefoot, packsack crowd."

The Times has been told the Queen of the North — originally the Queen of Surrey but renamed when she replaced the Queen of Prince Rupert on the Port Hardy-Prince Rupert route — has been plagued with serious problems.

They include:

— An inoperative fire detection system.
— Inadequate navigation radar.
— A hard-to-read compass card.
— Accommodation shortage.
— Unusable crew quarters.
— Misleading advertising.
— Passenger dissatisfaction.
— Faulty refrigeration equipment.
— Sloppy design in the refit.
— Fire extinguisher and hose containers not painted red.
— Collapsing aircraft-type seats.

"The original equipment aboard is fine," a crew member said, "but the refit has been botched terribly."

The Times attempted to contact B.C. Ferry's chief executive officer Charles Gallagher and corporate communications manager Bill Bouchard to comment on the ship's problems, but Gallagher didn't return the calls and Bouchard wasn't in.

A call to Transport Minister Alex Fraser's office resulted in a call back from Fraser's ministerial assistant Jess Ketchum.

Told about some of the problems, Ketchum said he hadn't heard of them.

Told about passengers sleeping on decks around the ship, Ketchum said, "That's strange."

On complaints about the service, Ketchum said the minister's office hasn't received any complaints.

The German-built ship was originally the Swedish liner Stena Danica. It's the same ship former B.C. Steamship's general manager Arthur Elworthy wanted but didn't get as a replacement for the Princess Marguerite on the Victoria-Seattle run.

One problem caused by the refit was that junction boxes in the fire detection system were covered over with steel channeling to which was attached panelling

The ship's entire fire warning system was inoperative the first two weeks the vessel was on the run.

This was the main reason the ship left Port Hardy on her maiden run with only a temporary certificate of seaworthiness from the marine surveyor (still called the steamship inspector by some) of the Canadian Coast Guard's ship safety branch.

When the vessel left on the 230-nautical-mile northern run May 30, it had a certificate good for only two weeks, according to Stephen Rybak, regional manager of public affairs for Transport Canada.

Also aboard the ship those first two weeks were seamen whose sole duty was to mount a 24-hour fire watch.

Because the system was a Norwegian design, a Norwegian engineer and his assistant spent the same period aboard the ship sorting out the problems.

A subsequent safety inspection prompted the marine surveyor to approve a certificate which expires Oct. 28, 1980.

The Times learned the Queen of the North has been given "bottom-of-the-line Sperry radar" when most other ships in the fleet boast top-of-the-line, gyro-stabilized Decca radar or equivalent equipment.

Considered particularly essential on the often fog-shrouded Inside Passage, the Sperry radar, a crew member said, tends to "smear" whenever the ship changes course.

And at any instant a captain or mate checks the radar screen he is unable to simultaneously determine the ship's course because there is no compass handy.

Anyone watching radar and wanting to know the ship's course must ask the helmsman.

But a difficult-to-read compass card has resulted in the helmsman occasionally calling out a wrong course heading.

Gambling prince stung in $20M theft

CANNES (AP) — A high-rolling Arab prince and one of his four wives claim to be more than $20 million poorer after a burglary at their guarded hilltop villa on the French Riviera. Police say the theft, possibly the largest in French history, may have been an inside job.

Prince Abdel Aziz bin Ahmed al Thani, a son of the former ruler of the oil-rich Persian Gulf emirate of Qatar, reported the loss of a collection of jewels he valued at $20 million. It was said to be one of four similar sets the prince had given to each of his wives.

In addition, the prince reported $120,000 in foreign currencies was taken "from on top of a bedside table" in the Thursday night theft, police said.

Investigators said if the prince's estimate of the loss is accurate it would make it the biggest robbery in French history.

A police spokesman said the prince — who is rumored to gamble up to $375,000 a day at Riviera casinos — provided a statement about the theft through his secretary.

The burglary from the second floor of the villa apparently occurred while the prince and his wife were dining on the first floor

The windows of their second-floor rooms were left open because of the heat and the burglar or burglars could have come through them. But police said they found no signs of outside entry, leading them to speculate it might have been an inside job. The villa has a staff of 20.

Investigators said Prince Abdel Aziz called jewellers to value the collections he had given his other wives. Police said the jewellers indicated each set was worth at least $20 million.

Another member of the Qatari royal family, Prince Mohamed Ben Hamad al Thani, a brother of the country's current ruler, had a suitcase containing $87,500 worth of jewels and cash stolen from his apartment in a leading Paris hotel recently, police said.

Battle lines drawn as oil talks fizzle

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The impasse reached by Prime Minister Trudeau and Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed over a new oil-pricing agreement Friday opens the door to a bitter constitutional battle over higher petroleum prices for the next several years.

Both leaders said Friday following the breakdown of two days of face-to-face negotiations they would assess the situation before deciding on any unilateral action.

"There is a fairly heavy list of serious consequences as a result of today," the Alberta premier told reporters, warning that the deadlock would sour the provinces to Trudeau's plan to write a new constitution.

Trudeau, on the other hand, did his best to defuse the atmosphere of crisis. "I didn't see the ceiling falling in on our heads."

"Negotiations failed," he conceded. "It has happened many times, in many fields without the country going to ruin. . . It does not mean gas and oil will stop flowing."

But that could happen. In just six days, the agreement under which Alberta supplies the rest of the country with oil at $14.75 a barrel expires. That leaves the province in a position either to set its a price of its own or simply refuse to sell its oil.

Lougheed refused to say what the province would do. He deflected question after question on the explosive subject by insisting that he had to consult his caucus next Wednesday before deciding what action to take.

Lougheed warned of an "obvious confrontation" facing the country while Trudeau, acknowledging the two sides are far apart, told reporters "we're not starting any war."

The major sticking point for Alberta — aside from pricing — is a federal plan to impose a new tax on exports of natural gas. Lougheed views the proposal as "offensive" and a clear intrusion by Ottawa into an area of provincial jurisdiction.

The Liberal government counters that it must increase its share of petroleum revenues to pay for development of new energy sources and says there is nothing illegal about its plan to tax energy exports.

Commenting on the failure of the energy talks, Premier Bill Bennett said Ottawa's proposed export tax on natural gas is an attack against the West for failing to elect any Liberal MPs west of Winnipeg.

Bennett repeated his government's opposition to the tax, calling it an additional
